PICKEREL FISHING.

In New England, and the Western and Middle States, Fishing for Pickerel has ever been one of the most favorite amusements. In New England we think the science or art is less known or understood than in this or the middle States, yet "Jack Crane" of New Hampshire, was never beaten. He could, from the "silver brook, draw forth the speckled trout," though probably he never heard of, much less read the "complete Angler" of good old Izaak Walton.

In Cincinnati, in Philadelphia, Baltimore, New York and Boston, we have Piscatorial Clubs, and frequently with pleasure, read of "achievements" by some favored disciple of the Rod, but in the country such companies are unknown. At times, a few, perhaps only two or three gentlemen fond of Angling, "join their fortunes for a day," and make a Piscatorial excursion to some lake or pond, celebrated for a good stock of the "finny tribe," but then, after a supper at "dewy eve," there is an end to the copartnership. We wish our friends would think of this matter, and, as every town affords gentlemen sufficiently numerous, form a complete Club. A few officers only are requisite,—the expence is too small to be any objection, and the pleasure is doubled. Make up a party to go out on a specified day, (if the Club is numerous or too large, divide it,) choose sides, and let the one taking the least fish, provide a supper for the other, and our word for it, you will better enjoy your sport and yourselves. Added to this, you cannot help acquiring some useful hints from observing the science or method of each other. If your Secretary is afflicted with the cacathes scribendi, any fine fishing should be reported; or if any observations that would be useful to sportsmen generally are made, our paper would be the very medium to communicate them, and one might have the "satisfaction," as Pat said, "to see his name in print," if unluckily he should be drowned or any other little accident should befal him.

We were led to these crude remarks by reading in the Sportsman's Cyclopedia, various methods of taking Pickerel, some of which we give to-day. Should any Waltonian friend make an experiment of some of those laid down, or his own, and give us his opinion, he shall be entitled to the thanks of ourselves and all good Anglers "from this time forth, forevermore."

In some places Pike are taken by what is termed dipping; the hook used is a large sized gorge hook, very slightly leaded on the shank, and baited as in trolling, only the mouth of the fish is to be sewed up, and the back fin cut away, and then looped to the swivel; the line is let out from the reel to a convenient length, and the bait is dropped in any small openings where the water is not very deep, and overspread with docks and weeds. The fish hanging with his head downwards, will, when gently moved, (and all baits, especially dead ones, should be kept in constant motion,) shoot and play about among the weeds so naturally, that the Pike will be eager in taking it this way, even from the surface: when the bait is seized, the line is to be slackened, and the Pike allowed line to run; in a short time it will be perceived to shake, which is a signal to strike; when hooked, he must be cautiously managed, winding up the line gradually: in getting the Pike through the weeds, endeavor to keep his nose above them, and use the landing-net in taking him from the water. In this method the baits must be as fresh as possible.

For snap-fishing, (which is best used in March, the Pike being then very shy of gorging, although with seeming eagerness they seize the bait,) should the rod be purposely made for it, the length should be about twelve feet; if a common rod is employed, the top should be stouter than that used in trolling, with a strong loop to fasten the line upon, which must be a foot shorter than the rod: for the live snap, no hook is so proper as the double spring hook: to bait it, nothing more is requisite than to hang the fish to the small hook under the back fin, which may be done with so little hurt to the fish that it will live for many hours. Gudgeons, (which, in all modes of Pike fishing, are superior to any other,) and dace are the best baits; they must be kept alive in a tin kettle, with holes in the lid, and which in hot weather should be placed in the water.

The other live snap-hook is baited by the small hook being thrust through the fish beneath the back fin; and some use a piece of silk or thread doubled, hung on the point of the small hook, and brought under the belly of the bait, and tied on the other side to the shanks of the large hooks; care and expedition are required in doing this, otherwise the bait will be so injured as to be incapable of swimming briskly in the water: a cork float, the size of a common bergamot pear, with a small pistol bullet or two, not only to poise, but to keep the bait at a proper depth, which is from two to three feet. If a Pike be near where the bait is put in, it will come to the surface, or increase the quickness of its motion to avoid him; these signs will put the angler on his guard: when the boat is drawn under, allow it to be sunk considerably before striking, which, in all snap-fishing should be with a smart stroke, and directly contrary to the course the Pike appears to take; the line must be kept tight, and the landing-net should be used, as the throwing out a large Pike by force will certainly strain the sockets of the rod.

Some use only one large long-shanked hook, whipped to gimp, with a swivel at the upper end; the hook baited with a gudgeon under the back fin, or through the upper lip, with a float as above, that will swim the gudgeon; fish at mid-water, and allow a minute after the float is sunk before striking: by this method perch may be taken, if the bait be a minnow or very small gudgeon.

A variety of hooks are used for the dead snap; and this mode of catching Pike is well adapted to both shallow and deep waters, to the still rapid parts of the river, will take Pike at all seasons of the year, supposing the water and weather favorable; and it will be no trifling recommendation that the idea of cruelty, which the use of a live fish naturally impresses, is, by this substitute, completely removed. The rod should be longer than that for trolling; the line fine, strong, and twenty yards in length; the hook by some most preferred is like that for a common live snap; the length of the gimp, on which the hook is tied, should be regulated by the size of the bait, and should be rather longer than the distance from the back fin to the mouth; that the looped end may be hung on a strong swivel, tied neatly to about a foot more of gimp, with a noose at the other end, to hang it upon the line, fastening a piece of lead, of the shape of a barley-corn, and weighing about an ounce, with a hole through it, about two inches above the swivel. The bait should be a middle sized dace: insert the baiting needle close behind the back fin, letting it come out of the mouth; draw the gimp to which the hook is tied after it; the short hook must stand with the point upright behind the back fin; the others will consequently be on each side; then hang it upon the swivel, and try if it will spin; if it does not move the bait a little to the right or left, which may be done without moving it from the hook: the whole success depends on its quick turning when drawn against the stream; and when it does, it appears like a fish unable to escape, and becomes too tempting a morsel for the Pike to resist: this method will not only enable the angler to fish a greater extent of water than the others, but is more certain to secure the Pike. The large ones, though bold in seizing the bait, are very cautious in gorging it: most trollers have experienced, that, after running out a considerable length of line, the bait has been mumbled to pieces and deserted; a disappointment here remedied, for a Pike has but to seize the bait, and he is caught.

At both troll and snap, some persons have two or more swivels to their line; by which means its twisting is prevented, the bait plays more freely, and to the dead bait in rivers it certainly is an improvement: in ponds or still waters one will answer the purpose.

PEDESTRIANISM.

A match was made on the 5th instant between Jem Metcalf, the Yorkshire runner, and Sam. Drinkwater, of Hartpury, near Manchester, for £50 a-side, to run once round Knutsford course, Metcalf giving Drinkwater 30 yards at starting. The money has been put down, and the match is to come off on the 28th inst. Metcalf will run Jem Hall, the crack quarter of a mile runner, the day after his match come off; and Ben Hunt, of Bolton, the day after that, 600 yards, for 50 sovereigns each.

SPANISH GUN BARRELS.

Spanish barrels have always been held in great esteem, as well on account of the quality of the iron, which is generally considered the best in Europe, as because they possess the reputation of being forged and bored more perfectly than any others. It should be observed, however, that of the Spanish barrels, those only that are made in the capital are accounted truly valuable. They are proved with a treble charge of the best powder, and a quadruple one of swan or deer shot. At Madrid, and throughout all Spain, the manufacture of barrels is not, as in this and most other countries, a separate branch of the gun-making business, but the same workmen make and finish every part of the piece. Almost all the barrels made at Madrid, are composed of the old shoes of horses and mules, collected for the purpose. They are all welded longitudinally; but instead of being forged in one plate or piece, as in other countries, they are made, like the English twisted barrels, of five or six detached partitions, which are afterwards welded one to the end of another, two of them forming the breech, or reinforced part of the barrel. To make a barrel, which, rough from the forge, weighs only six or seven pounds, they employ a mass of mule shoe iron, weighing from forty to forty-five pounds; so that from thirty-four to thirty-eight pounds are lost in the heatings and hammerings it is made to undergo before it is forged into a barrel.

THE DEVIL'S FISHING.

"All the World's a Fish Pond."—Shakspeare.

What luck, old Clovenfoot, to-day?
Said I, one foggy morning,
As he threw out his line for prey,
Poor mortal folks suborning.

"Not much," quoth he, "but what I have,
Beyond dispute, is fair gain;
What notes to shave, I've caught a knave,
A miser with a bargain.

To catch a needy bean, I took
A draggle-tail'd surtout—
A would-be belle found on the hook,
Attempting full-dress suit."

What fish bite sharpest, Pug? says I,
"Why, as to that," quoth he,
"I find not many very shy,
Of high or low degree.

Your toper bites well at a cork,
(When there's a bottle to it,)
Your Jew will even bite at pork,
If he smells money through it.

Some shy ones play about the line,
Till prudence waxes feeble,
And those at last are often mine,
Who only meant to nibble?

There's few indeed, of small or great,
(Or I am much mistaken,)
But may, by some peculiar bait,
Be tempted and then taken."

FOXES.

We believe it is remarked that these animals are much more numerous in Ayrshire at present than for several years past; and of this and there well known dexterity and attachment to the poultry of the farmers they have given most unequivocal proofs in the frequent depredations recently committed on the neighboring henroosts. On several estates much care has been taken to preserve Reynard exclusively for the "hunt," and this, together with the number of plantations affording abundant cover, now to be found in the districts of the county, no doubt accounts for their increase. But, notwithstanding of this care, and the proverbial cunning of the animal, which generally enables him to take care of himself—or in more homely language, "to make himself scarce" when danger is apprehended, it appears he sometimes falls in a much more ignoble manner than in the chase, when pursued from all his haunts by "hound and horn;" and of this, rather a remarkable instance occurred the other day. A terrier, belonging to a carter, while straying along the road side somewhere near Fullerton House, fell in with a fox, which, in place of flying from the dog, as, from the habits of the animal, was to be anticipated, unexpectedly turned upon him and gave him battle in the most courageous manner. The consequence was, they immediately seized each other, and the fox would certainly have been triumphant, but for the interferance of the carter, who ended the unequal contest by cruelly knocking poor foxy on the head with the shaft of his whip. It proved to be an uncommonly large female, and altogether as fine a specimen of the old Scotch fox as can be found.—Glasgow Courier, Dec.

A WIFE OF TWO HUSBANDS!

There is now living at Sandiacre, a woman who has married two husbands. They both live in the same village, and she, very conveniently, sometimes is found with one, and sometimes with the other, and amongst them all the greatest peace and harmony prevails!—Nottingham Review.

Matrimonial Miscellany.

NUMBER X.

BY CŒLEBS BENEDICT, ESQ.

COURTSHIP.

"Oh Laura! will nothing I bring thee
E'er soften those looks of disdain?
Are the songs of affection I sing thee
All doomed to be sung thee in vain?
I offer thee, fairest and dearest,
A treasure the richest I'm worth
I offer thee love, the sincerest,
The warmest e'er glowed upon earth!"
But the maiden a haughty look flinging,
Said, "Cease my compassion to move;
For I'm not very partial to singing;
And they're poor whose sole treasure is love!"

"My name will be sounded in story;
I offer thee, dearest, my name:
I have fought in the proud field of glory!
Oh Laura, come share in my fame!
I bring thee a soul that adores thee,
And loves thee wherever thou art,
Which thrills as its tribute it pours thee
Of tenderness fresh from the heart."
But the maiden said "Cease to importune;
Give Cupid the use of his wings;
Ah, Fame's but a pitiful fortune—
And hearts are such valueless things!"

"Oh Laura, forgive, if I've spoken
Too boldly!—nay turn not away,—
For my heart with affliction is broken—
My uncle died only to-day!
My uncle, the Nabab—who tended
My youth, with affectionate care,
My manhood who kindly befriended—
Has—died—and—has—left—me—his—heir!"
And the maid-n said, "Weep not, sincerest!
My heart has been your's all along;
Oh! hearts are of treasures the dearest—
Do, Edward, go on with your song!"

A THOUGHT.

To Cœlebs Benedict, Esq.

Dear Sir—I am fain to address you, and trust you will minister to my discontent. For five years, although I am scarcely beyond thirty, my mind was fully made up to live a bachelor—so fully, that matrimony never crossed my mind unless perhaps in a dream. I was consequently contented, and, I thought, happy: but I am now miserable. The other evening I was in company with a young mother—one, that I knew as a child, when I conceived myself a man. Her three children were before me. The eldest, a fine blooming girl—all sprightliness and all humor. On the table lay the Juvenile Miscellany. I was desired to read it aloud, and complied. An interesting domestic tale, rendered with appropriate simplicity and elegance of diction, unconsciously extorted my tears. Half ashamed, I turned from the book to the groupe around me. Never were my feelings more excited. It appeared to me, that I was like Satan in Paradise, gazing upon Eve, in the full enjoyment of her pristine happiness! I thought that such might have been my situation. I thought of the years I had lost—of the knowledge I had acquired, o'er which the stream of Lethe seemed to have flowed,—for, while reading that simple tale, artfully interwoven with scientific truths, I felt myself less than a child. I left the house. Ah! exclaimed I, mentally,—What would have been my situation now, had I embraced the matrimonial state, seasonably! The knowledge I have acquired, and which has run riot and is lost, would have been imparted to my younglings, and returned to me from them with a four-fold harvest. I could think no more. I hurried home—and, as a last resort, appeal to you. Dear Mr. Cœlebs tell a bachelor how to get a wife. PHAON.

P. S. If she have the corns, I certainly would not object. P.

We advise Phaon to disregard corns; they are very troublesome, unless the shoe be large. If his patrimony be ample, we recommend him to overlook wealth, although we do not object to the Scotchman's advice, that is, "gang whar it is."

BUSINESS COURTSHIP.

In the wealthy town of M——— lived an old gentleman of that description of bipeds yclept bachelors, who for "many long rebellious years" had withstood the earnest solicitations of his (female) friends to enter into the state of matrimony. Lately, however, he seemed to regret his long celibacy, and one evening his friends finding him in an unusually pliable mood, gathered around him, and at length prevailed upon him to "pop the question" to a neighboring female, who they had no doubt, was disposed to let slip no opportunity of exchanging single blessedness for matrimonial felicity. To this lady therefore, he "onward pressed his way," and knowing from experience the "shortness of time," and having a decided aversion to any thing romantic, he resolved to adopt the most concise way of "despatching business." On knocking at the door, the matron maid presented herself; having ascertained "her to be her," he proceeded to "explain." "Madam," said he, "my friends wish me to be married—they think you would suit me. I have no objection I give you a fortnight to consider it; good day ma'am;" leaving the astonished damsel to meditate on the proposition. On the eve of the day fortnight, when she had proved that "hope deferred maketh the heart sick," a gentle rap was heard, and, trembling with delight, she proceeded to open it, when a voice she had once heard and never forgotten, inquired, "Well, madam, have you decided about the business I named to you?" She blushed, and as pleasantly as she could, said something about not wishing to disoblige Mr. ——— 'friends, nor go out of the order of Providence, the little time allowed her," &c.; when the gallant suitor cut her short by replying, "Madame, I see which way your inclination turns—this day week we will be married."

HE'S GOT THE MITTEN.

Much is expressed in this short sentence. It tells of hopes withered, and dreams of happiness fled and gone perhaps forever.—The young and the thoughtless may sneer at the unfortunate victim, and the cold worldling may drop some passing remark upon it, but if some single old gentleman like myself should hear that short exclamation, it would elicit a warmer and a tenderer sentiment. His mind would unconsciously travel back to the days of his youth and dwell upon the period when he too had received this memento of thoughtless pride and girlish prudery.

To me it is peculiarly affecting. The girls indeed laugh at my grey hairs and peaked nose, and quiz my gaunt like appearance.—Yet I was once young and gay, and my happiest hours passed in the society of maids, as blooming and handsome as themselves.—And from one of the fairest of her sex I received that curse of and terror of bachelors—"the mitten." It came scorching and deadening in its influence, and blasted anticipation in the bud. I never loved again. Many years have since passed away and my age is lone and dreary. My home is cheerless and my fire-side unoccupied; life itself is devoid of charms, and when I search for the cause, I travel back through many a wintry year to that bleak spot in my youth, when "I got the mitten."

If then I hear of one in a similar situation have I not cause to say that it affects me? Too plainly does it tell of feelings trifled with, and affections spurned and trampled in the dust. It reminds me of those days that are gone and the visions of my childhood—of hope, and love, and the thousand bright dreams that played round my heart when life was young and buoyant. Those days, alas! are no more, my friends are away, and the season of youth can never return. With sorrow I confess it, I belong to the fraternity of "we single gentlemen," and am now at fifty-five, a thin, spindle-shanked Old Bachelor, weary of the world and unknown to its enjoyments.

In defence of the "brotherhood," I must say, however, that I believe in nine instances out of ten, they can date the commencement of their resolution to lead a single life from this only cause; nor can it be doubted that many an unfortunate maiden has had reason to lament her indiscretion, and with benumbed fingers in a chill old age, regreted the day that she gave her lover "the mitten."

European Field Sports.

EXTRAORDINARY CHASE.

His Majesty's stag-hounds, threw off at Iver Heath, on Monday, and had decidedly the finest run this season. The deer made for Uxbridge, steering from thence for Hillingdon, and backing to Hayes, when he crossed the country and made direct ahead for St. Albans; at which place at dusk, the hunters and hounds put in for the night. On Tuesday, with an addition to the field, they were again all alive, and after five hours' tremendous running over heavy ground, were compelled once more to knock up and return to quarters. On Wednesday they resumed the pursuit, but had very little sport, having lost after a short run. On Thursday they entered the field once more, but whether more successful has not at the time we write this account been ascertained. The same deer last year was out five days before she was taken.—Berkshire Chronicle.

ROYAL HUNT.

On Monday, Nov. 26, the morning being fine, a numerous concourse of people from town, and the vicinity of Windsor, assembled to witness the first deer hunt which has taken place for some time in that neighbourhood. At the appointed hour he was uncarted at Saltbill, and took his course towards Chippenham at a steady pace. Not finding his pursuers inconveniently near, he took a cold bath in the mill-pond (Mill-house), again starting off in gallant style towards Dropmore. On reaching Lord Grenville's grounds he delighted his pursuers by clearing a high paling which led into the copse. The hounds being now well up, and pressing him rather closely, he was compelled to quit his sylvan retreat, and pursue his course to Dropmore grounds. Here the hunting was magnificent and the pace excellent. Quitting Lord Grenville's at a spanking pace, and hotly pursued towards Beaconsfield, and passing Sir George Ousley's, he was headed and compelled to retrace his steps to town, running in at the back door of a house lately occupied by Mr. Everett, where he was captured, having afforded a beautiful run of nearly an hour and a half.

THE CHASE.

On Friday morning, a large fox was seen in the vicinity of Bridgnorth, but immediately sneaked away to a neighboring cover. He soon afterwards made his appearance again, and attacked the goose-pen at the New Hotel public house, in the absence of the landlord, and carried away a very fine goose. When the landlord returned, which was late in the evening, he discovered to his great loss, that his favorite goose had been stolen. He immediately made inquiry, but no trace of the thief could be found till the next day, when a gentleman's servant said he saw a fox, near the village of Norton, dragging a goose after him, upon which the owner went to the Master of the Hunt, and obtained leave to hunt him on the following day. Early on that morning he was again seen lurking about the same place, waiting for more prey, when the hounds were instantly unkennelled, and laid on to a very hot scent, which they closely pursued till Reynard became alarmed and went to ground under Barnet's hill—a most notorious earth.

The hounds and sportsmen were now at a stand, and commenced operations for the capture of poor Reynard. Whilst they were examining this haunt they discovered a vast quantity of prey, which he had purloined from the neighboring houses. Fragments and remnants of every description discovered him to be an old offender. The feathers of the poor goose were classed among the number, to the displeasure of the rightful owner, who at the same time rejoiced that he had some traces of his stolen property, and that the thief would soon be in his possession. Poor Reynard was quickly dragged from his dirty retreat, and being again let loose, made play down the upper road at a slapping pace for Bridgnorth, the hounds close at his heels. The view holloa was briskly given, each sportsman striving for a good place. He crossed the river, but could not gain an inch on his pursuers. The streets were literally lined with spectators to witness the novel scene. Each sportsman being well laid in, the enthusiasm of the hunt can scarcely be conceived, each raising his stentorian voice, until Reynard exhibited strong symptoms of distress. He is intended to be bagged and kept for the Shrewsbury hunt in March, and much diversion is anticipated by the lovers of the chase. He is one of a summer litter, who have for a long time infested the neighborhood of Bridgnorth, and appears to have been previously much diseased, as his nose and legs were much swollen, and the skin was very loose upon his back. He has for a long time been the terror of the neighboring gamekeepers, and from the appearance of his den, has no doubt destroyed more heaps of game than any sportsman in the county.—Wolverhampton [Eng.] Chron.

EXTRAORDINARY HUNT.

On Tuesday last a fine stag was turned out at Northport Gate, near Wareham, and after sufficient law, the Charborough hounds were laid on, amid a very numerous field of variously mounted horsemen, and nearly 200 pedestrians. The stag took the road to Cold Harbor, thence to Triggon Hill and Caroy, leading his pursuers over a very rugged country at a good round pace; near the mill at Binegar it crossed the river Piddle, and made away over the heath to Holme Bridge, near which he crossed the river Frome, and ran for a considerable distance up the meadows, thence to Highwood near Wool, back again to Holme, and through the plantations to Stoborough, where the hounds were for some time at fault. They soon, however, recovered the scent, and the stag took the heath to Povington, then to Grange, the seat of John Bond, Esq. and on to Norden clay pits, where, from the nature of the ground, and the number of openings in the soil to the clay-pits, the hounds were again at fault.

The company having gradually dropped off in the last few miles, the field which had been so gaily attended at the outset, began to be very select. After some time, the stag broke away from the pits, in full view, and the hounds ran breast high across the Corfe road, and on towards Rempstone, the seat of J. H. Calcraft, Esq.—suddenly however, it turned to the left, and led his pursuers a dance through a very uncomfortable berth—namely, the great bog in Slepe heath, where many of them bid fair to close the day's sport in no very enviable plight, being up to their girths, and several, over their saddles; the hounds by this accident getting the start, ran into the deer in Arne Moor, and before the nearest horseman could arrive, began to lacerate the poor animal, which they nearly tore to pieces. Many desperate leaps occurred, and some whose loggery was not of the most sound description, lost in these unusual feats, stirrups and cruppers by the dozen. It is supposed that the stag went over 40 miles of ground.—Salisbury [Eng.] Guardian.

Sports of the Turf.

THE TURF IN ENGLAND.

The English Sportsman's Cabinet for December, has a very severe article on the state of the Turf in that country, a portion of which we give in our paper to-day. The writer, we are glad to see is perfectly independent in his strictures, and appears entirely au fait to the system of swindling which he says is carried on to an alarming extent, by an association of scoundrels, many of whom figure in the first circles of society. We were not aware of the extent to which these transactions had arrived, although Prince Puckler Muskau, in his recent travel in Great Britain, pointedly alluded to the management of the Jockies and trainers of some of the nobility at the races at Newmarket, Epsom, &c. "If such things be," it is time the subject was taken up in earnest, and we trust the sporting magazines, and other periodicals will, "as in duty bound," lay before the public full details of the frauds practised and "lash the rascals naked through the world."

The writer before us, with many others, has taken high ground on this subject, and every honest man will say, "lay on, Macduff," till the existing state of things is done away. "If," says the editor of the Cabinet, "the Ring has reached the acme of turpitude—if it has become the very cesspool of infamy, what must be our feeling when we contemplate the painful retrograde of the Turf, for the last half score years—when we look at the regularly organized system of deception and wholesale swindling, at which its proceedings have arrived! No honorable man has, at present, a chance of fairly contending for, or winning any of the principal stakes, unless it happen to suit the views and the books of the numerously confederated, consummate rogues, who labor during the previous winter months, to organise and render as complete as possible their system of plunder for the ensuing season."

This is strong, perhaps harsh language, but "desperate measures, desperate means require," and we hope our friends of the mother country will "cry aloud and spare not" till this stain on the character of the high minded and gentlemanly sportsmen of the English Turf, is, as Shakett would say, "tetotaciously exfunctated."—Our cotemporary continues,—

Let us look at a late "investigation before the Jockey Club;" it appears very like the conduct of two thieves who, having quarrelled respecting the division of the booty, each becomes eager to administer a little "whitewash" to himself! We shall not here recapitulate the particulars, as they have gone the round of the daily and also of the weekly press. If we investigate the business we shall find that most of the trainers have not only contrived to get extensive stables and numerous horses, but also to possess, an interest in almost any horse to which they take a fancy; they preserve an understanding and a connexion with each other, and thus when a horse is discovered of superior powers, he is "planted" or "placed" accordingly—a drag chain is placed upon him, if necessary, and the thing made as safe as sinister contrivances can make it.

The trainers have their confederates in various ways, and are anxious to have a proper understanding with the judge, in case the thing should become a nice matter. I have witnessed many instances of this kind. Two or three years ago, I happened to be at Epsom Races; and, in the very first race, which was run on the Tuesday morning, a horse called Conrad and the celebrated mare Fleur de Lis appeared, amongst others, as competitors. I had taken my station in the uppermost wooden stand, which afforded the best possible view of the finish of the race. The struggle lay between Conrad and Fleur de Lis;—and, if my orbs of vision did not very grossly deceive me, I saw Conrad win the race as fairly as I ever saw a race won in my life. Several gentlemen, who sat near me, were fully impressed with the same unqualified conviction; yet the judge declared the mare the winner! I should like to know how his betting book stood on the occasion. Let it here be repeated, no judge, having bets upon the race, can go into the chair with an unbiassed mind. No jockey, being a bettor, or having an interest in a horse, ought to be allowed to ride,—at least the horse of another person. No trainer, possessing a property in any horse or horses, ought to be trusted with those belonging to another person.

Let us reflect a moment upon the career of Velocipede; let us look back upon the manner in which the Yorkshire junto (principally of trainers) have got into their hands many of the best horses; let us look at what more southern juntos have been able to effect; and finally, let us look at the dishonest practices which thence result from the system of wholesale swindling down to the mere pettifogger in the infamous science! All the great snakes are made sale; books are made right, down to the lowest grade of betting, of which I give the following as a specimen:—

Among the various classes of bettors, there are those to be found, who establish an extensive correspondence with trainers and jockeys, and by this means they ascertain that a number of horses whose names appear in various stakes, will not start: in consequence, they get all the bets they possibly can p. p (play or pay) and reap a harvest of ill gotten lucre without risk: there can be no fair bet, where there exists no chance of losing.

The King of Prussia has resolved to introduce Jockey Clubs into his kingdom. His consul in this country has been directed to transmit to Berlin all the documents on the subject.

The most celebrated stud in Russia, is that of Bebrow, in the Government of Woronege, not far from the village of Erienow, belonging to the Countess Orloff Tchesmenskoy. It was established in 1778 by the Countess's father, and at present contains 1,329 Arabian and thoroughbred English horses. Attached to this establishment, are 40,087 dessetines of Arabic land, 149 workmen, and 4,295 serfs; the sales of horses amount annually to 75,000 roubles upon an average.—They take place by the stud, and in the two capitals of the empire.

STEEPLE CHASE.

The Steeple Chase which was made at the last great fair of Ballinasloe, for 100 sovereigns, between Captain Lloyd's bay horse Mountaineer, and Mr. Caxon's chesnut horse Monck, four miles, 18 stone each, and which has excited so much interest in the sporting world, came off on Tuesday, the 6th November, in the neighborhood of Borrisokane, in the Co. Tipperary, before the largest assemblage of sportsmen seen together for many years in that county. Captain Lloyd's horse was rode by George Smith, Esq., and Mr. Caxon's by the owner. The fences were large and numerous, and taken in splendid style by both horses, when, after a well-contested race, Mountaineer won cleverly. The superior horsemanship of Mr. Smith was never more conspicuous than on this occasion; and from the Mountaineer's speed and extraordinary fast fencing, he promises to make one of the first Steeple Chase horses in the kingdom. Monck being a first-rate hunter, and having won two Steeple Chases, betting was decidedly in his favor at starting.

INFELIX SENECTUS.

To see an old and gray haired man,
It always makes me sad;
For why—I shall grow old myself
That am so stout a lad.

What if one takes the portly turn,
And swells, and puffs, and grows,
Who does not hate your walking whale,
Your full blown human rose?

Alas! a little dapper man,
May come to weigh a ton—
The pantaloons of twenty-two,
Are tights at forty-one!

And then to think of getting thin,
Is bad as bad can be;
Your eagle nose, your salient chin,
Are shocking things to me.

I'm not a baby or an ass,
But yet my soul it shocks,
That time should whittle down my legs,
And pick my golden locks.

Some decent calves are made of cork—
They're awkward in a boot;
Some decent periwigs are bought—
They're slow at taking root.

No—let me weep, I cannot bear
The wasting hand of years;
O were there nothing else to shed,
I would not grudge my tears. H.

"SPECULATION."

A modern little yankee-doodle, during the late fall trainings (in the town of ——) went to a "gineral muster," to see the wonders of the occasion. The next day he went to "the summer school," of his district to which he belonged, and undertook to give the boy next to him an account of his adventures. This being observed by the Mistress, he was called up to be chastised for whispering. "What was you whispering about, John?" said the school mistress—"Nothin marm." "Nothin? Yes you was! What did John Simons say to you, Moses Smith?" "Why, why, why," said Moses, "he said he wanted to tell me somethin—and I told him he must'nt whisper—and he said he wanted to tell me bout his speculation at the trainin yesterday." Well Moses what did he tell you? said the mistress. "Why, why, marm, he said as how he bought a great piece of gingerbread, for a fopence, and eat off the hosses, and sold it for six cents—and so he did".—Lowell Mercury.

Mrs. Anne Royall has been presented with an engraved portrait of the Hon. Richard M. Johnson, as a new year's gift. In alluding to her present, she says: "We should have prefered the original to-be-sure, but are neverth'less thankful."—Petersburg Chron.

A PREMIUM.

A country editor offers the writer of the best Dun to delinquent subscribers and others, a copy of Gov. Hayne's Proclamation, framed in red tape.—Baltimore Visiter.

SAGACITY OF A HORSE.

A few nights since, a girl in Abercorne street, was passing the end of the house where she lives, with a horse and cart, when the horse, all at once, stopped as if he had seen a bogle. It being quite dark, the girl could see nothing, and though she attempted to urge the horse forward, it would not move a step. The girl dismounted to see what was the matter, and to her surprise found a man lying drunk straight across the path. As soon as he was removed the horse passed quietly on.—Paisley Advertiser.

WOODEN CANDLES.

Mr. Editor:—I don't know what you'll think about it, but I've got somethin' to tell you that's as new as a new hat. The Yankees may brag as much as they please about their ingennity—their wooden nutmegs, silver side saddles, Prussian pumpkin seeds, and Machines for making whitash rakes out of chesnut chips—but they can't begin with the Penn-sylvanians. They make no bones at all of palming bass-wood hams, flannel sausages and blue-clay soup, on the Yankees, and, not satisfied with that, they've got up the new thing that I'm a going to tell you about.—You see I took it into my head, to try to speculate a little, to make up the eighteen pence that I lost a bettin' on the 'lection. At first I did'nt know exactly what I'd better try at, and was just talkin' with my landlord, (a pretty clever fellow for a Dutchman,) when somebody came along, and asked if any body wanted to buy any candles for four pence ha'penny a pound. "There's a chance for you,' says the landlord, 'any of the storekeepers will give you more than that for 'em, right off.' I'll be darned if I don't b'lieve that the landlord was in the scrape, for if he had'nt have been he'd have bought the candles himself. But you see I didn't think of that, and so I bought a whole box of the candles—and how do you think I got such'd in? If you can guess in a week, I'll treat you to a glass of Daff Green's best julap. But to save you all that trouble, I'll just tell you how it turned out.

A piece of white oak wood, turned in the shape of a candle, with a snug little wick in each end, cover'd with just about tallow enough to grease the bill of a Long Island muskeeter!

If I ever buy any more candles, I'll find out whether they are made of chalk or cheese, before I let any body get such another laugh on me, as the honest Dutchman has now got on that unfortunate Yankee. EZEKIEL.

WANTED.

At this office a person capable of writing theatrical reviews, criticisms and puffs—one who is willing to be denounced as a "fool" and "scribbler" in the green room. He must have judgment enough to know write from wrong—independence enough to write what he thinks; and fortitude enough to bear a whipping. Such a person is much wanted in this city—had we one, we might hear less of what they allow "in the Green Room of Covent Garden Theatre."—Baltimore Visiter.

TO LADIES IN WANT OF HUSBANDS.

It appears from the Sydney Gazette, that in the Sutton Forest district of Australia, there are only 140 females to 240 males, and that four years ago, there were in the whole colony not more than 8987 females to 27,611 males, leaving a melancholy deficiency of 18,624.

MARCH OF INTELLECT.

The reader has observed the march of pantomime in the action of the omnibus cabs—great intellect there! The purveyors to omnibuses at the Angel, Islington, have yet a larger stock of that fashionable article, intellect. One little fellow who dealt in penny tracts and lolly-pops, was attended by another rather younger, who bore a penny tray, with penny trumpets, penny-worths of all sorts, penny articles in omnibus.—'Is that your apprentice,' said a gentleman to the elder boy; 'No sir, he's my pupil,' was the answer. This smacks of the schoolmaster.

LANDLORDS AND COTTAGERS.

On Thursday the Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells gave a dinner of good old English fare—roast beef and plumb pudding, and goodale brewed for the occasion—to upwards of 200 of his cottage tenantry, on the completion of their 7 years occupancy. His lordship attended in person, but his presence was no restraint on his humble guests. After 'the King,' with three times three, his lordship proposed 'peace and plenty—good tenants, and good landlords—and success to the cottage system throughout the kingdom.'—Bath Journal.

THE FORCE OF SHAME.

On Saturday evening, Nov. 10, an inquest was held at the Lord Nelson public house, Trafalgar road, Greenwich, on the body of Ann Hayter, a widow, who kept a green grocer's shop in East lane, and who cut her throat the preceding day. The deceased had been in custody, charged before the magistrates on suspicion of stealing some silk from a box which had been left her in custody, but was liberated on her promising to appear on the next day. She was low spirited, and declared she could not live to go through the disgrace of the charge, and in a fit of despondency destroyed herself. Verdict accordingly.

An officer of the 30th regiment, who went with his cigar in his mouth and sword in hand, to cover the retreat of the army in the descent of Mount Atlas, had his mouth completely full of tobacco smoke, which even kept the dental arches asunder, when he was struck on the right cheek by a spent ball, which entered and lodged in the oral cavity without any other lesion than the perforation of the soft parts which it met in its route. The officer spat out the tobacco-smoke and the bullet together. There still remains a slight scar on the cheek.—Medical Gazette.

In 1825, one of Mr. Carroll's grand daughters was married to the Marquis of Wellesley then Viceroy of Ireland; and it is a singular circumstance that one hundred and forty years after the first emigration of her ancestors to America, this lady should become Vice Queen of the country from which they fled, at the summit of a system which a more immediate ancestor had risked every thing to destroy; or, in the energetic and poetic language of Bishop England, "that in the land from which his father fled in fear, his daughter's daughter now reigns a queen."

"Let there be light," was commanded before we were ushered into this breathing world, and light there was. So it was at a certain ball given lately by "gas light," at a certain fashionable Hotel. "Miss———," said a gentleman, "allow me to introduce to your acquaintance, Mr.———;" but sudden darkness came over the hall. The music stopped—all but one solitary fiddler, who by the particular request of a fair lady, struck up "Where is my lover, oh where has he gone." No one dared to move. The manager bid some one "strike upon the bell;" but who could tell where the bell was to be found? Silence was commanded, and the Master of the Dance exclaimed in a stentorian voice, "Give me but light, and Ajax asks no more!" It had the desired effect—Ajax had light and the ball went on.—Boston Transcript.

EXCUSE FOR STEALING A HORSE.

Riding out of a respectable town in the north of Ireland, contiguous to the district called Killavey, which is celebrated for its bogs, a gentleman met one of the turf-selling Paddies of the "holy sod," apparently in much tribulation. The vender of peats approaching the gentleman with a true Irish cast up of his hand to what had once been a hat, accosted him with "Plase yer anner, wud yez be plased to show us the road to Lunnun?" Somewhat surprised at Pat's enquiry, the gentleman replied by asking his business in London. "Och, an' plase yer anner, I'll till you that same so I will, an' if yez 'ill jist listen to me, I'll give yez the whole history iv it from the tap till the battum."

PORTER'S FAMILY JOURNAL.

We have arranged with Dr. Porter the conductor of this print, and shall next week embody it with the Traveller & Times. Dr. Porter's engagements with his "Family Library" preclude the attention which his paper demands. In essaying to cater for the patrons of that Journal we shall sedulously keep in view the objects contemplated in its establishment.

Thankful for the extraordinary patronage with which we have been favored, we trust that the accession of this Journal will furnish an additional stimulus to endeavor.

MRS. TROLLOPE

Has abused us, and perchance justly on occasions, for the very incipient state of our civilization at present. And now, if it were only for the benefit of example, we trust the same lady will give us the "domestic manners" of her own infallible home. The fact is, we have wrong ideas in America of that which constitutes the truly chaste and elegant. For instance, our ladies are far too diffident, and what can be a greater sign of vulgarity than diffidence. Now, here in this overgrown, dull, desert of a city, it is ten to one, if a single lady could be found, who would venture a hundred dollars at a throw of Hazard, while Mrs. T. can boast of many a fair countrywoman, of all ranks, from Queens to milliners whose main employment is attending fashionable "Hells," and showing their dexterity at the dice box. Again, our ladies are the most ignorant beings in the world, touching horse-flesh, while the gentle dames of England, at least those who are high bred, know every in and out of the stable, from the halter ring to the hay rack, and the use of all and singular, from the curry comb to the hoof pick as well as the ostler himself. Nay, there are some ladies who seldom suffer a farrier to operate on their palfreys, and even perform the part of blood-letters themselves. Besides, which of our sleeping beauties know any thing about hunting, or ham-stringing? Which of them can boast of being in at the death, or of cutting the throat of a yet breathing deer. O! Mrs. Trollope!—Mrs. Trollope! how you have opened our eyes to the misery of our situation, and to the stupidity of our ladies; the most venturesome of whom, have seldom followed a hound, or bore away a fox's brush in her bonnet—and yet this is nothing to the classic or enviable skill displayed by the Island dames.—Look we at Brighton, and how can our dull ideas keep pace with the march—the sweep of refinement. O! how delightful it is to see the ladies of that city dressed in pantaloons, riding their beautiful pet asses to the waters, in all postures, and any posture you please. Imagination can depict nothing so interesting. They look so martial—whistle and whip so heroically, and curse with such a grace. Thus it is evident our country-women have much to learn besides the fashion of foreign caps, and we would recommend them to begin by practising the rifle—playing billiards, or studying the bone and sinews of a race-horse, and then, and then only, will they be able to emulate European civilization.

We must also denounce the tame character of our public Sports.—Where be our bear, badger, and bull baits? Where be our dog nights, our cock mains, and all those refined, elegant and intellectual methods of murder, which rejoice the sight, and associate with the feelings of the civilized foreigner? And oh! above all, where be our public gormandizers? Well may we be found fault with on this score; for though there are some Americans, who, when hungry, can make the most of a good dinner, still it has never been our fortune to cross one who made his own individual powers of consumption a profitable profession; but look at London, chaste and classic London—where you may frequently see men going about, from "tap" to "tap," swallowing prodigious quantities of bullock's liver, tallow candles, &c. &c. for the edification of the public, and then receiving money and encomiums in exchange. A friend of ours assures us that he once made one of a very fashionable audience in a London minor Theatre, to see a man devour a live cat, beginning at the head; but as a full detail of the affair might shock our plebian notions of delicacy, we will merely state that the spectators looked on in mute admiration during the performance, and that a storm of applause served as a dessert to the gentle man's supper!!

To conclude: who has not heard of Billy, the most famous worrier in the world, and the boast an glory of the giant metropolis. Billy, the beloved and caressed of every, body whose rank entitles them to the favor of stroking his beautiful back, and why should he not be honored? A dog, who, at any time, can kill his hundred rats in 40 minutes, and thereby change the owners of many an hundred guineas. No, Billy, the smiles of beauty shall never cease to brighten up thy face, and thou shalt never murder rat, mouse, or hedge-hog in public, that Duke and Duchess, Earl and Countess, Lord and Lady, 'Squire and Dame, shall not crowd to congratulate you. These are the things which constitute good society. These are the things which prove the advancement of civilization, and these are the things which characterise some of the elite of Mrs. Trollope's country. Alas, poor woman! how sincerely we commiserate you for your sufferings in this benighted country, and how sincerely we congratulate you for your miraculous escape, from the barbarous Yankees. However, to a heart so susceptible, so affectionate, so gentle as yours, the good you have done will be a sufficient indemnification, not to say a word about the booksellers, possibles, or your own Peg Plunket reputation.

New York, Jan. 22 1833.

To the Editors of the Traveller and Times.

GENTS—You will please discontinue your paper as it is of no use to me. I have some good friends that call and read the paper, and when done, carry it off with them. Yours respectfully, WM. P. MILLER
51 Ferry street.

N. B. We cannot in conscience comply with the above request, as our correspondent is among thie "immortal few" who paid the annual advance.

MUSIC STORE.

We beg leave to call the attention of our musical friends to the extensive catalogue of music published by JAMES L. HEWITT, 137, Broadway, New York; and 83, Washington Street, Boston. The songs, glees, rondos, variations, waltzes, cotillions, marches, &c. emanating from the above named estoblishment are a "leetle the slickest" we have seen in our goodly Gotham.

INTRODUCTIONS.

We know of nothing in our experience which results in so much awkwardness, as the slovenly manner in which introductions are usually made. It is at best Mr. Thingem'e—Mr. Thingem'e; and then, when you wish to address the gentleman introduced, a grave Sir, is all you can utter. If perchance you meet him in the street, and he exclaims, 'How are you, Sir.' If your desire be ever so intense to stop and converse with him, your ignorance of his name prevents you, and onward you go, cursing your clumsy friend for the bear-like introduction. In point, (not en passant)—at the querulous South a mutilated introduction, such as we have faintly adverted to took place; it was followed on the part of the recipient by another introduction to a third friend—but, guessing at the name, as compelled, he used the name of the introductee's dearest enemy. Slight and coldness was the consequence. The Southern's blood mantled, and the Yankee's nettled. A challenge was the consequence—a meeting, and one of the parties left severely wounded.

Ye mumbling chaperons take warning—when-e'er you introduce a friend, think on this sad catastrophe, and distinctly enunciate. If you do not, the ban of Mrs. Trollope fall on you.

HALF AN HOUR OF AN EDITOR'S LIFE.

GEN.—What's his occupation?
SERG.—A Scrivener, Sir—a spinner of brains—
GEN.—Oh! an idle rascal, that does nothing and Eats less. Have a care of him, or he'll sharpen His wits on your stupidity, and pass us current For fools.
OLD PLAY.

There are two very comfortable situations in the world. The first, when a man is compelled to listen to lectures on his past misconduct when going to be hanged; and the other, when an Editor, sits down to eke out half a column from an empty brain, (not to say a word about his stomach) while, all the time the office boy, imp, devil, or what you will (the last suits best on such occasions,) keeps grumbling and tugging at his elbow for the, as yet, unorganised emanations of his genius.

Here is the temple of odds and ends—deaths and marriages—politics and prize fighting—scattered in the very glory of confusion over a superannuated deal table, and there sits the manufacturer of scraps, looking as pleasant as a bear just caught in a trap, and scratching his bewildered head with the stump of a goose quill—Tap—tap—tap—Who's there? "Bill, Sir,—the foreman's waiting for copy." O, that's true—five minute's grace, tell him, and I'll be his for ever. God help us—not a line written, and the paper goes to press at ten. Let's see, what can I perpetrate? suppose a murder—pish, the papers teem with them; nullification? no; well, a bottle of smoke? just as bad; suppose a poem then? Why that may do at a pinch, particularly as a man's in a hurry, so here goes: first a pretty list of termination words; second, to fill up the lines; and then for a taking name. Begins, Sing, fling; bright, light; dove, love; Brook, duck; no, try it once more, that last word wont do; guess, bless—damn it, the door again. Come in. "O beg pardon, Sir. Has your paper stopt?" No' why? "Kaze as how it hasn't been left these three weeks, at my house." Indeed! carrier's fault, Sir, not mine; please give me your direction and we'll see it attended to next time. "At Mr. Ebenezer Popplejay's, No. 678, Blank Street, up three pair of stairs in the back room, must be left before twelve: good morning, Sir."—Good morning and be—ahem. Heavens: what a catalogue: enough to make an anchorite swear. Knocking again—push—the devil—eh? no; but an angel—at least a new subscriber, cash in advance—some comfort in that—and a fresh supply of inspiration. Where was I? O, I see—but, cat; boar, pure—bad verse, but let it go—poetical word any how. The door again. Oh! for the cave of Demosthenes. "Open Cesame—" What, Mr. ——, pray be seated, Sir,—very happy to see you. Hang it, the Landlord—fourth time of calling—little hope of poetry now, I guess. What's to be done? Landlord for money—Devil for copy—aching head—empty purse—and no chance of an earthquake. What now, Bill, it's not ve minutes yet, I trust. "The foreman says he can't wait no longer, Sir." Hark! knocking again. Another dun, I s'pose. No, but worse. That eternal milk and water, hum drum, chair stopper, on his usual lounge of five hours per diem. Morrow, Tom.—Fine day—stop, devil, and take that insatiate Foreman of your's half an hour of my life. I can give him nothing better, at present. Heigh ho! what shall become of us, if the reader be any way hard of digestion, or just after receiving a curtain lecture. However, we trust he'll consider our situation,—duns, devils and all therewith connected—and now, boy, your copy's ready—"Brush instanter."

JOHN HOWARD PAYNE.

We cut from the Boston Courier of this week, the following paragraph. The hint is given, and we have no doubt the Bostonians will do the genteel thing, as suggested by "our cousin of Buckingham."

Our distinguished countryman, John Howard Payne, is at present in Boston. Would it not be proper for us to show him some public mark of respect? The liberal benefit given him by the people of New York affords us a good precedent for imitation. We see that they have in preparation at the Tremont House, an Opera translated by him from the French. Suppose they should perform it one night for his benefit, and add to it another of his plays or afer pieces, and put the prices so high as to make it a real advantage to him, and not merely an empty compliment? A word to the generous as well as the wise, is sufficient!!

MALLOCK'S POEMS.

We have just perused a little work, lately printed in this city, from the Edinburgh edition, entitled "The Immortality of the Soul; with other Poems. By David Mallock, A. M. First American edition." It is neatly "got up," by the New York publisher, Wm. Stodart, Esq. No. 6, Courtland-street, and reflects honor on the press of Messrs. Booth and Smith, from which it emanated. The principal poem in the collection on the "Immortality of the Soul," was read in the University of Edinburgh, a few years since, having been successful in competition with others on the same subject. In addition to this information, the author adds—"a consciousness of the greatness of the subject, and a knowledge of the weakness of many parts of the poem, a it originally stood, conjoined with the hope of being able, in maturer years, to render it more worthy of public notice, have deferred its appearance until now."

This poem, which comprises about one thousand lines of heroic iambics, is divided into two parts, each of which is illustrated by notes. It opens with the supposition of annihilation after death, and the feelings to which such a belief would naturally give birth. A series of arguments are then adduced, to prove the contrary doctrine;—such as the universal belief of the soul's immortality; the prevalence of monumental remembrance; the love of fame; the unity and immateriality of mind; intellect and imagination; the power of conscience; the progressive nature of mind; hope; the inequalities of earthly existence, &c. The second part opens with an apostrophe to Hope, which we select as a fair specimen of the author's poetic talent:—

Hail, glorious Hope! eternal and sublime,
To rise triumphant o'er the wreck of Time!
Celestial Comforter—illustrious Guest!
Still find thy home within this troubled breast;
Soothe it through life, and, with thy balmy breath,
Pour incense round it in the vale of Death;
Nor leave it there, but tend the Spirit's flight,
Divine Companion! to the realms of light!

See from afar yon starry-vested form,
That sweeps like moonlight through the misty storm,
Gath'ring new splendour as she onward flies,
Like the young Dawn that purples round the skies;
And from her airy urn of rosy hue,
Scatters, benignant, showers of horied dew;
While 'neath her aromatic breath, Earth's bow'rs
Ope their green halls—and wake the sleeping flow'rs,
And the white fountains, and the sounding streams,
Laugh in the light of her empurpling beams!—
Onward she moves, majestic, onward still,
Changing her course, like changing clouds, at will:
Last, her melodious accents! how they flow,
In silver gushings, on the world below!

"Stranger to Earth—I come, enshrin'd in light,
To pierce the gloom of man's protracted night;
Lone native of a holier, happier sphere,
Unsought, I come! to gild the mental year:—
On to the goal—thy steadfast course pursue,
Still brighter scenes shall burst upon thy view;
Till, like a lark high-soaring from the plain,
In blazing light shall end thy darkling strain."

We have only room to add, that, in our opinion, Mr. Mallock holds or may hold, a respectable rank among the living poets of Great Britain. The miscellaneous pieces, which constitute about half the lines in the little volume before us, are mostly very pleasing; the sentiments are moral, the style chaste and the versification smooth, flowing, and easy. But we must protest against the introduction of penultemate rhymes in a sublime epic; the effect is very disagreeable to our ear; as much so, almost, as would be the introduction of Yankee Doodle in the oratorio of Creation. The following are specimens:—

Farewell, ye glorious heavens—intense in brightness!
Ye clouds all gorgeous—based in snowy whiteness!

Again:—

Eternal pyramids—cloud-clearing mountains!
Mirrors translucent—ever-swelling fountains!

On the whole, we are pleased with the poems, and believe the leading one of the volume may have a salutary effect, in checking the progress of religious scepticism.

Chapter of Chit-Chat.

Here Salmagundi snugly lies,
Sometimes serious, sometimes laughing—
Flushed with thought up to the eyes,
The champaign of reflection quaffing:—
Gentlemen, he'll oft' amuse you;
Ladies, he will hate to lose you!—
So pray put yourselves together,
And smile around him pleasant weather.

Two gentlemen from London are about establishing a bank in the province of St. John, with a capital of £300,000.

A Manchester (Eng.) paper says, that at a meeting of the Cheltenham Glee Club, during the performance of "Non Nobis Domini," by forty voices, a glass tumbler, which stood upon a table in the room, broke into a thousand pieces, as if it had been shattered by an explosion of gunpowder!

A lady, the wife of a Mr. Andrews, of Essex, Mass. lately presented her husband with "three lovely boys," the fruit of one birth, all weighing sixteen pounds.

A short time ago a hen belonging to Mr. John Milne, of White Fields, which was in the act of hatching, had her office usurped by a game cock, who continued to attend to his charge with the greatest care. Another set of eggs was given to the hen; but the cock brought forth his progeny before the hen, and is now attending to his charge with all maternal tenderness.

The Keesville (N. Y.) Herald, published a singular case, but not without a parallel, even in good old bible times. A case is now undergoing examination at Plattsburgh, to decide which of them is the natural mother, and entitled to a "living child." The child is five months old. Both, as in the days of King Solomon, swear to the identity of the child, and both have abundance of circumstantial evidence. The case is not decided, but the editor of the Herald promises to lay the proceedings before his readers. We shall do the same.

During the engagement of the Kembles at Washington, Chief Justice Marshall attended the theatre. Upon his entrance on Monday week, the house rang with peals of applause.

Our sporting friends will be pleased to hear, that a Mr. John Rycarson, of Shearsbury township, Lycoming county, Pennsylvania, brought to Muncy, a catamount, a wild cat, and a black fox, which were trapped by him on the Alleghany mountains, about 12 miles from the latter place.

A French sermon was preached in the Holy Trinity Church, Philadelphia, on the afternoon of Sunday last.

The Washington Correspondent of the Baltimore Gazette states, that "among the private bills which passed the Senate on the 30th ultimo, was one for changing the surname of Captain Finch, of the Navy, to Bolton. It was reported some time ago that this gentleman, who is now in England, had become heir to an Earldom, and an immense estate; and the fact, that he has changed his name to that of a noble family in England, has given fresh currency to a very romantic story.

The National Intelligencer contains an official list of patents for useful inventions and improvements, taken out in 1814, and which have consequently expired during the year which has just closed. They amount in number to 222

The Pennsylvanian of the 19th records a very extraordinary event. It appears that on Friday, the 18th inst.—(memorable day!)—a gentleman having a borrowed book in his possession, only two years, returned it uninjured and unsolicited, although the owner's name was not written on the title page. We hope some of our loving friends will come and "do likewise."

The amount realized at the late fair, got up by the meek Sisters of Charity, for the benefit of the Female Orphan Asylum, at Baltimore, was $1200.

A St. John N. B. paper contains the following "puff extraordinary," of the Messrs. Hermanns—"When compared with them, the organ is but a penny trumpet; the piano-forte but a jews-harp."

A "great big" mahogany log, measuring 224 feet, was sold in this city at auction, for 59 cents per foot, making $139 16 cents.

The Thomaston Patriot tells a very amusing pig, (not fish) story. It appears that one of these critters, attempted to cross Brill river, and when about half way over broke through; but instead of drowning, as some more intellectual human being would, in all probability have done, swam towards the shore under the ice, and, when arrived there, braced his back against the ice, and got out without the least assistance.

The Westchester Republican publishes the following as a literatim curiosity. It is the endorsement of a letter, which passed one of the post-offices of Westchester county a short time since:—

To the State of Pensilva Nia this letter I send Unto Chester County whare its Journey will End
Unto hopewell village Dispatch it with Ceare
To friend Thomas —— who lives Hard by thare!

Five hundred dollars reward has been offered by the Assembly of Rhode Island, for the apprehension of that right reverend criminal, E. K. Avery.

A good 'un.—At a late exhibition of mutes in Boston, the word Patriot was written on the show-board, to which one of the scholars added—"I have learned there were many in New England several years ago!"

The estate of W. Gilbert, of this city, was sold at auction on Monday and Tuesday of this week, for $235,250. It was purchased fifteen years ago for $40,000.

The public authorities in the district of Dermbach (Weimar) have issued an order to prevent children from joining public dancers in taverns, &c.—to correct the present addiction of children to the drinking of ardent spirits—and to discourage parents from bringing up their children to the trade of begging. The last we should expect to follow the two former. A little attention to the morals of parents would evidently not be amiss.

A Kentucky paper states, that at a late term of the Court of Common pleas, holden at Augusta, a woman was indicted for assailing her husband, the jury returned a verdict of guilty, and the Court sentenced her to pay a fine, and give security to keep the peace for two years. The woman preserved a bold look and composed air, till the officer told her she must take up lodgings in the jail, not being able to obtain the required sureties: she then "lifted up her voice and wept."

An editor "down east" complaining that some of his readers consider the passage, "he that runs may read," as authority for running in debt to him, while others consider it a justification for running away, and adds that if they continue to run into this error they will run him down.

A lady of Saratoga complains of the gentlemen of that village walking with their hands in their pockets, and earnestly conjures them to abandon the odious practice, and keep their hands warm by wearing gloves, or, if gloves are not sufficient, she suggests the propriety of borrowing their grandmother's muffs. That's right, "Lucy."

J. G. Bennett, late of the 'Courier and Enquirer,' but more recently of the 'New York Globe,' now defunct, has connected himself with the 'Pennsylvanian' of Philadelphia. The Gazette of that city says:

"Mr. Bennett writes with some fluency, and used to have a very felicitous way of, his own, when he was joined to the New York Enquirer. He must be up very early in the morning, however, to outdo his present colleague, in humour and repartee."

The celebrated Indian Chief Red Jacket, when sold what a fine country the Government had provided for the Indians, provided they would give up their own lands and emigrate, remarked, that the distant country could not be so good as represented, "else why did the white man want the Indians to go there; why not go there himself?"

Ornithologists, particularly Audobon and Nuttal, assert their belief that the wild turkey has become extirpated from New England. This is not true, for they are found in the vicinity of Holyoke and Mount Tom every year, and sportsmen have shot them in Southampton.

Joseph Russell, left his residence in Edinburgh, on Tuesday the 22d ult to go to Schenectady, for the purpose of buying leather, (having about $50 in money with him),—since which time he has not been heard of. When he left home, he wore a drab hat, mix colored coat, and corded pantoons. Any information respecting him will be thankfully received, if addressed to his brother, Cornelius Russell, Broadalbin, Montgomery co.

Isaac Hubbard, Esq. of Claremont, N. H. has a calf which weighed the day it was a year old, 570 lbs. measured round 5 feet 6 inches, and in length 6 feet 6 inches. It was taken from the cow at a week old, and learned to drink ilk Its keeping has been rather expensive, though not very intemperate.

The stage fare between Boston and Providence has been reduced to one dollar. The Tremont Company have obtained the Mail contract. Opposition is the life of travelling.

Not long since a chap from the land of wooden nutmegs visited this town, says the New Bedford Gazette, with a load of alarm clocks, and invited a son of Erin to buy one. Troth, said the man of the "Emerald Isle," I have now in my house two alarm clocks that wake me every hour and every half hour in the night, and if you can make two as good I will give you fifty dollars apiece for them. The Connecticut jookey looked surprised, and wished to see them; upon which Pat took him into his house, and showed him a pair of squalling twins.

For the 999th time, has, we are informed, been discovered by a gentleman in Mass. which somebody thinks is likely to produce an important change in the science of Mechanics as well as in the operative business of life. It is unnecessary to describe this machine, as every one has been built after the same model. When a person can "lift himself up by the waistband of his inexpressibles," he may be able to set himself in perpetual motion.

A post-office has been established in the village of Padanaram, Mass. called the South Dartmouth Post Office, and Bradford Howland, Esq. appointed Postmaster.

The little monkey, riding jack as he is called, is worth $500. The daily expenses of the establishment are $50. The elephant possesses a very voracious maw. He will devour one hundred loaves of bread, we are informed, as fast as they can be given to him.

On the evening of the same day they parted, and on Thursday morning the usual caution appeared from the happy swain telling the good people not to trust or harbor his better half, as he was determined to pay no debts of her contracting.

Wm. Parker & Co. of Boston, have made great improvements in paper making. The publishers of the Transcript got out of paper, and made application to Parker & Co. for a supply. It seems they had none on hand of proper quality and size, but having a team in town they said they would "send out some stock and have the paper made as soon as possible." In forty eight hours after, the Transcript was printed on paper made from that stock although it had been tran-ported twenty-two miles from the city—manufactured, and brought back the same distance.—But more of this in our second chapter.

The New Orleans Argus mentions that an ingenious mode of robbery, was lately put in practice, at the post office, in that city. The passage of the letter box was stopped up, in such a way as to prevent the descent of letters: and the letters which were deposited, thus lodging near the aperture, were easily extracted from the out side. The same device was put in practice, sometime ago, at the New York Post office.

An English paper says: A certain Ducal Hero [Wellington] has been so particular in his attentions to a celebrated young beauty, that many persons suppose that Apsley house will soon have a mistress. The young lady alluded to is so distinguished for her beauty, attainments, and high connexions, that it seems to be agreed on, by all who have the happiness of knowing her, that she ought to fill the highest station amongst our nobility; and as Venus was known to reward Mars for his toils, the lovely Miss ——, may well serve as a substitute, and bless our British Mars with her hand.

AVERY, the alledged seducer and murderer of Sarah Cornell, it is said, has taken passage in a vessel which recently sailed from Bristol, R. I. for Cuba. Circumstances have been developed of a nature calculated to establish his guilt.

Communications.

TO PHILIP WHETSTONE, Esq.

A decent respect for the customs of mankind, render it right and proper that a man, especially a public lecturer, should sometimes puff himself.

It cannot be a matter of indifference to him whether truth or error be propagated, nor whether men's stomachs be well filled with the fat of the land, or whether they sink under the deadening pressure of bran or sawdust, provided that error best fill his pockets, under the semblance of benefiting society.

Knowing your disposition and your capacity for gullibility, I am most happy that I am permitted to address you on a subject, in which I, more than any one else, am so deeply interested;—and being on the wane of popularity, I hope to cling to your skirts, until I shall have completed my original plan of stuffing the throats of the people with husks, and my pockets with "Kinikles," by one and the same process.

From my earliest youth to the present time, perceiving that the chief e f one half of mankind, was to impose on the other, the chief purposes of my soul have been devoted to become first among the gullers; to utter nonsense in the disguise of wisdom from the forum, and to receive greetings in the market places—or dinners in a chop house.

Never in any day or night dream, did I project a scheme for my own advantage, that did not oper to lighten the purses, steal the time, addle the heads of the fools that came around me.

I acquired my A. B. C., learnt to write, and figured in my cyphering book, all with reference to this great end.

With this governing desire, I have spared no pains, no effort ualify myself for the right mode of attaining my object. All that geology, mineralogy, chemistry, botany, anatomy, physiology, pathology, dietetics, hydrostatics and hocuspocus, demonology and witchcraft, caloric and cathartic, soumambuhism and smoke, gymnastics and gimslingism, optics and oysters, accoustics and antifogmatics, can afford in support of my cause, I have possessed myself of. I have ransacked the earth, the air, the fire and the water. I have str tched into the heavens, and with a strength of mind peculiar to myself, have I

"Pursued the comets where they furthest run
And brought them back obsequious to the sun."

All things in law, love physic, politics and science have I monopolized. Into eating I have dived deeper, into cookery I have squatted lower, and out of drinking have I come drier, than any man this side of sun-down. All this have I done to make the people believe that it is the easiest thing in the world to make a whistle out of a pig's tail.

The quacks and horse-doctors, good souls, they are dear friends of mine. I scratch their backs and they tickle my elbows. They rejoice that credulity still exists in the world, and compliment me for my aptness in imitating their practices upon it—letters enough to shingle a meeting house have been by them addressed to me, the modest lecturer on the science of human life.—Thus proving the falsity of the adage, that two of a trade can never agree, for between them and me, there is no mustard nor vinegar, but all is honey, soft soap and harmony.

You will see therefore, that I have not come up in darkness to carry on my trade of juggling, and imposing on the simple and the credulous, the grossest absurdities decked in the garb of plausibility. You see that with my preparations, I can throw saw-dust in a man's eye and make him see the clearer for it; you see that I can tickle a flat with one hand and help myself out of his dish with the other.

LINES TO LAVINIA.

Written to the Air of "MARY'S DREAM.

BY M'DONALD CLARKE.

Oh sing once more that sweet, sweet song,
That always thrills me into tears,
As pallid Hopes—a pensive throng
Rise from the gloom of Memory's years.

It is my boyhood's favorite tune.
Warm with the glow of many a dream
That shone—but stole away too soon,
Like moonlight from a dark'ning stream.

Dreams, the undoubting Spirit thinks
Will wake to love, and bless—cold truth,
Till one by one each vision sinks
That tempted so, in trusting youth.

It brings back many a faded scene
—Far off among the joys that were—
Of what my nature once has been
Ere roughen'd by this world of care.

Scenes of delight that lingered on,
Smoothing the sheltered path of Home,
Perhaps unvalued till they've gone,
No more across our lives to come.

Those saddened words their bloom recall
With charms, that boyhood recks not of,
That sees and feels—but knows not all
The magic of Domestic Love.

The form of her who loved me first,
With the fresh ardor of a time
When every artless thought will burst
From souls, unchecked by doubt, or crime.

A fair—an unforgotten girl—
The chosen of my childish plays,
—With brow, o'er which soft ringle's curl—
Smiles, from her grave, upon my gaze.

Again I see the old arm chair
Where many a summer night I've knelt—
The rounded cheek that rested there—
The blushing eyes, that seemed to melt.

Oh when those meek eyes met my own,
How often has she stopp'd—and cried,
As feelings gave that song a tone,
That made me tremble by her side.

That fond voice, when alone, I hear,
Like the wind moaning through the dark,
How sweetly in my haunted ear,
Methinks it murmurs—"Sandy Clarke."

But she is in her winding sheet—
Youth with its witching dreams is fled,
And when that mournful song I meet,
It seems a—whisper from the dead.

Her's was a pale and pensive face,
A soft and soothing voice like thine,
And time, and trouble, wont erase
Their spell from this lone heart of mine.

* * * * * * *

I've tried to tie my thoughts to words;
Affection's hand aside, may cast
For Earth has served them like the birds
That battle with the wintry blast.

And in one gentle human breast
They never yet have found repose—
These, too, may be like all the rest,
Till bleak oblivion o'er them close

Unless sometimes thou sigh'st them o'er,
Whilst weary Gladness is withdrawn—
When my poor name is heard no more—
When Sandy shall be dead and gone.

BOB SHORT.

A CHAPTER ON PIGS.

'Tis Education forms the swinish mind,
Just as the Pig is bred, the Boar's inclin'd.
—Pope.

A Pig, according to the French adage, is the only idle gentleman in England; and yet it were difficult to conceive a more unmannerly, or disrespectful fellow, than an English pig if his breed be crossed, but especially if the connexion be Irish.—This may be easily proved by observation.

Your thorough English porker, if his pedigree has been unmixed for six generations together, is a straight-forward, dull, downright sort of a body, with very circumscribed pretensions to intellect, and seldom manifesting any symptoms of passion, unless perchance, when the iron toe of a carter's clog be applied fundamentally, or when his indignation is justly excited by the unwarrantable attack of a butcher's mastiff upon his nose. But show me a pig any where between Berwick on Tweed to Penzance, who is given to dancing on his hind legs, or shaking his head as if he had a bottle of quicksilver or a flea in his ear, or biting the legs of a horse, or tugging at the skirts of a lady's petticoat, or taking a round out of a bull-dog, or in short, showing any symptoms of improvement in wit or impudence, and I'll swear to you, that if he be a John Bull himself, some of his ancestors had a smattering of the Murphy's in them.

But if you wish to see a pig in his glory, an intellectual and liberally educated pig, go to Ireland. People are in general mistaken as to his true character, judging him haply, by the degraded and stupid specimens abroad upon the world. But if they had been where we have been, and if they had seen what we have seen, namely, 15 or 20 merry little urchins playing at hide & seek about the cabin door, while all the time the father and mother, and perhaps, an uncle and aunt or so, kept grunting a jig to them in a corner, and if at such an hour, any unfortunate dog presumed to break in upon the harmony of the festive circle, then they might congratulate themselves on knowing something of the domestic, classic, and hostile character of a well reared pig.

From a boy upwards, I have been thoroughly acquainted with them. They were my companions through the mud—my bed-fellows in the cabin—my hobby horses on the green sward—and, in fact, my every thing in a friendly way, for it seldom happened that a quarrel rose between us, unless now and then when I ventured unthinkingly among them with a piece of bread and butter in my hand, or attempting to ride them with a pin sticking into the heel of my boot [when I

DICK DOLEFUL.

A SKETCH

BY McDONALD CLARKE.

Dick Doleful was a languid lad
Of yard stick size, and slender muscle,
Who always made his Grandma and
When the North Winds began to nestle,
For fear they might, whene'er they met him
Take a sly notion to—upset him.

His laziest luxury was, to loll
In the back room upon the settee,
Feeling as folks say, rather "toll,"
And ringing now and then for Betty,
To bring out from his Grandma's closet
His slick stewed oysters, soused in posset.

But Dick as he grew up, became
Big as a porpoise, round the belly,
So that the girls would smile, fie—shame,
La is'nt he a walking jelly.
The silent hit, half creened his waddle,
Giving a quick lurch to his noddle.

Still he would go a courting—phew
What work it was to puff up stairs;
The only way he had to do
Was two steps—and a rest—by pairs
He managed to get at the lady,
And found she was—engaged already.

Dick's life was dozing rather dull,
At balls he couldn't cut a caper;
Smoking dumplings filled his skull,
And dimm'd his greasy thoughts with vapor—
In short—his habits of good eating
Made him, not good for such a meeting.

One day he look'd the Mirror o'er
And chanced to spy the word 'gymnastic,'
Which he had never seen before—
The advertisement said, elastic,
Walnut sinew soon soon follows
The exercise with—15 dollars.

He took the hint—he soon became
One of the bluffest fellows going;
With whisker'd cheek and whalebone frame—
Cock of the walk he now is crowing,
And what is better—all the women
Have set their love-traps to—ship him in.

Health is a lady worth one's while,
But like her sex a little skittish,
And we must, for her dorsl smile,
Do as our Dads did by the British:
Give her a real Irish thumpang—
Then freedom round us will be jumping.

Those gentlemen who lounge with Leisure,
As well as those who feel her slight,
If they'd have rounds of roaring pleasure,
Must jerk an hour from Day or Night
To join the levee of friend Fuller—
For Health, the romp, likes men to pull her.

Tis worth a cup of Nature's wine,
Which is, Knapp's superfine spring water,
To call at Ann street 29
And see to how much nerve he's brought her—
Joy in Dyspepsia's dull eye revels,
Who laughs at Duns, and the Blue Devils.

MATCH RACE AT COLUMBIA, S. C.

The splendid matches for $10 000 each, between Little Venus and Bonnets O'Blue, Bertrand, jr. and Andrew, were to come off on this Course, the 23d and 24th of the present month, in addition to the regular races of the Jockey Club. We have not heard whether Andrew had recovered from the injury he received at the Fairfield meeting, Va. but are of opinion his owner will pay forfeit. Some time since such was the rumor among our sporting friends here, and that Andrew's hurt was so severe as to preclude the possibility of his ever again appearing upon the Turf. The match however, between the magnificent Bonnets O'Blue and the darling Little Venus, will cause no small stir of the pewter among our S. Carolina friends. The question of Union or Nullification will not be discussed, we opine, for the time being, predicting as we do, a larger Union meeting of Nullifiers than either party has been enabled to assemble since this all-absorbing topic has been broached. Indeed, the proverbial chivalry and hospitality of the Southern Sportsmen, the fame of the horses, the mildness of the season in that region, the tout ensemble of the crowded and animated Course, with its glorious associations for the lover of the Turf, conspire to ensure the highest enjoyment to those who can enjoy the enviable opportunity of mixing in such an assemblage of "the choice spirits of the age," both biped and quadruped.

We can only wish them, with a cotemporary, what they are sure to find, "a fair field and no favor;" and entertain the hope that the event may turn upon a fair trial of speed and bottom, without accident or misfortune to either.

The result shall be laid before our readers directly as reported; we trust to receive it in a few weeks.

EXHIBITION AT TAMMANY HALL,

BY MR. MEEKS.

Pursuant to a notice in our paper of last week, on Monday evening "old Tammany" was crowded with "the Fancy" of Gotham, to witness the exhibition of Mr. James Meeks, from Albany. We have not latterly made our paper the medium for communications connected with "The Ring," but the character and standing of Mr. Meeks are such, that on this occasion we gladly throw open our columns for a brief notice of his last exhibition in our city, of the science of Self-Defence.

Strong prejudices exist, we are aware, among our citizens in relation to this manly exercise, though considered to this day among the first of "old English Sports;" yet we believe they arise in a great measure from an almost entire ignorance of its nature and object. For ourselves, much as we deprecate prize fighting as a characteristic national amusement, we certainly should think no less of a gentleman who could defend himself against the attacks of a blackguard or ruffian. To every man, especially one whose pursuits may bring him in collision with persons of this description, as a means of defence, a knowledge of the science is invaluable, and we never were acquainted with any one thus gifted, whose bearing or conduct discovered the fact.

An eloquent English author remarks on this subject;—

"As a recreation it is invigorating; as conducive to health, it is renovating; by throwing action into the chest, strength into the nerves and power throughout the whole system. It is, in fine, one of the best practices of the gymnastic order combining both self-defence and health To the weak it gives strength, and to the strong an adaption of their physical force, to the best advantage. A knowledge of this science can do no hurt, if productive of no good. But the developement of manly power, assists nature in her efforts to stay disease, to harden the sinew, and to open in human veins, the gushing fountains of health."

Several Amateurs on this evening made play in clever style; in fact our city has ever been celebrated for its number of scientific swells. They with great spirit came to the scratch, but after a jobber or muzzler from Mr. Meeks, were inclined to play round him a la distance. A green horn, now and then backed out with a gory nob, or a slashing job on his ogle. Mr. M. had, of course, to play "the old soldier," or they would have been used up. One poor devil concluded after a terrific fib, that had he received a second, all left of him afterwards would have been but "a small grease spot" on the floor!!

We understand the entertainment gave unqualified satisfaction to a large and respectable assemblage, and that the utmost order and good feeling was manifested throughout.

We are requested to call attention to the "Grand Fancy Dress Ball" of Mr. Trust, at the City Saloon, Marble Buildings, to take place on Wednesday next. Rumors of the most favorable character are afloat.

SAVANNAH JOCKEY CLUB RACES.

We learn from private sources that great expectations of sport exist in relation to the races that come off over the Bonadventure Course this week. Several fine horses were on the ground, others on the way, and a great many expected from stables north and south. The Bonadventure is a new Course, and is spoken of as being a very superior one from which we predict the race will be of a high order. R. D. ARNOLD, Esq. the Secretary, will much oblige us by forwarding the minutes at his earliest convenience.

The Drama.

THE DUNLAP BENEFIT

We are pleased to say, is progressing, and with a vigor promising a rich harvest. For ourselves, we should have preferred the price of admission to be fixed at Two dollars. We do not look on Five and Two as the maximum or minimum in this case, nor do we attempt to take exception: but we do know that at Two dollars more tickets might be sold, and so many more, as would probably produce an extra thousand dollars. It is not empty parade which is intended; the design is to benefit, strictly to benefit. How many of our worthy citizens, alive to the merits of Mr Dunlap, would gladly avail themselves of the opportunity were not the proscriptie ban placed on them. We know of many that would spend ten dollars who will not now spend three, and as we are heart and soul engaged in the cause, we trust there will be a reduction in the price. The seasons unfavorable, and half of the exclusives will be occupied with other and more important engagements. My Lady B. and my Lady C. unless perchance they make a party, will have too much else to claim their attention.

In seriousness, we trust the tickets will be placed at Two dollars, thus affording in our Democratic country an opportunity to each and all, high and low, of participation in a distinguished and deserved festival.

While we are thus, and so deservingly complimenting Mr. Payne, and Mr. Dunlap, should we not for a moment turn our attention to Cooper, and should not the Manager of the Park, who has so largely benefitted by his exertions, extend to the veteran appropriate courtesy.—There is no man who has added more and taken less proportionately from the Park treasury than Mr. Cooper, and there is no man in time honored reminiscence that exceeds him as an actor. Let the Manager do his duty, the public will do theirs, and then, the "Noblest Roman of them all"

will receive the reward he so richly merits.

To see Cooper again on the Park boards will be a treat. What a throng of associations will come rushing. The Damon, the Brutus, the Virginius, the Anthony, and the Macbeth, (with Wirt's thrilling description of it,) would be conjured like unto the race of Banquo, and carry us back to the buoyant hours of youth and happiness. We know that Mr. Cooper will draw, and we trust Simpson will, for a moment, cease to worship Saturn, and to his old coadjutor and friend, mete a worthy opportunity.

Enough—we will not essay to conjure spirits, but merely appeal to the numerous and talented admirers of Cooper, if his sun shall set in darkness. If so, we cry shame! 'Twere worse than if Talma had been buried in unhallowed ground.

Mr. Clarke!—In his walk he has no equal, and we certainly expect to see him oftener, and more advantageously.

THEATRICAL GOSSIP.

Good bills and good houses have been the order of the week past, at the Park. Mr. Forrest on Monday gave us a spirited personation of Macbeth, and with one exception maintained his friends in their high opinion of his talents. The Evening Post in speaking of the performance, says—"Mr. F. does not often lay himself open to severe criticism," &c. Granted: but with all deference, we would ask on what authority did Mr. Forrest on this occasion, in reciting the lines

"Hang out our banners on the outward walls;
The cry is still, They come:" &c.

make the scene ridiculous by pausing after this wise:

"Hang out our banners."

and then dropping his voice entirely in continuing

"On the outward walls, the cry is still, They come:" &c.

thus making a full period after the word "banners." We should have thought Mr. Coleman's admission of the entire incorrectness of this once "mooted point" would have settled it, to the writer's satisfaction, knowing as he does the reputation for almost infallibility which, on the subject of the Drama, &c. Mr. C. ever possessed in an eminent degree.

Mrs. Sharpe did not perhaps come up entirely to our opinion of what she might have rendered Lady Macbeth, though in several scenes she was particularly happy. Mr. Barry's Macduff was much applauded, and we thought justly.

Our old favorite Miss Clara Fisher has afforded us many a hearty laugh as Doa Giovanni, and Victoire in the Invincibles. She is so much at home and so well appreciated by our theatre-going community, that in her absence we have the same feeling as for an absent member of the family.

We do not recollect seeing Othello better played as a whole, than on Wednesday evening. The Othello of Mr. Forrest would have suffered little in comparison with the elder Kean's. What can we add more; to those who have been delighted auditors of the last, no compliment of ours could be greater or more expressive. Mr. Barry's Iago would have reflected credit on any "bright particular star," that has lately come under our notice. In fact, the stock company did wonders, on this occasion, and even surprised themselves as much as the audience. It might appear invidious to speak individually—we therefore merely remark that each "acted well his part."

We cannot close our "gossip sketch," though pressed for room, without saying a word for a worthy lady and meritorious actress—Mrs. Mangeon. We trust Mr. Simpson will find it to his advantage to make her's a permanent engagement.

Mr. Mason, too, deserves much at our hands, for his masterly Tristam Fickle. It is doubtful whether the character has ever been given with more taste and spirit on our boards than in his late personation.

Mr. Simpson's benefit took place last evening, in which Mr. Forrest, Miss Clara Fisher, and the talented little Burke appeared. We have no doubt a bumper was received, for certainly it was not unmerited.

THE BOWERY.

The past week has been occupied with benefits at this Theatre. The attractions were of course "great." "Nullification, or the Yankee in Charleston," the new ree, has been played with eclat. Mr. Gates, plays Peletiah Peaceful, "pretty considerably well." The "Dr. O'Toole" of Anderson, in the Irish Tutor, is admirable. The play bills nightly announce the important fact that Mr. Farren is the "Stage Manager."

Several articles are unavoidably omitted for want of room.

THE NEWS!

The writer of the following article is manifestly gifted with a fine sense of the queer and the comic, which, combined with the wit and raciness of the narrative, should go far to induce an attentive perusal. We transferred it to our columns from the Commercial Advertiser, and beg leave to commend it to those of our friends whose motto is—"laugh and grow fat."

NEWS.—Perhaps the greatest competition of the age is that which springs from the ambition to be foremost in the obtainment of news. To acquire the opportunity of telling the first story, be it for good or evil, exertion is used, and expense created in a ratio altogether disproportionate to any possible benefit that can accrue to the community. But who does not know the headlong propensities of our people? Who does not know that they will sacrifice comfort, health and convenience to obtain passage on board the quickest steam-boat, that they may arrive at Albany some minutes sooner than the one that follows it: and for no other earthly purpose than to spend those few minutes in lounging upon the docks, or finishing their toilet at the Inn. But those who cater for the public taste, must not be fastidious in the means of administering to its enjoyment. Such, at least, is the opinion of some of our worthy cotemporaries, who have established Daily Expresses to bring us southern intelligence in advance of the mails. To be sure, there is some hazard of life and limb in the case; since, as we are informed by a morning journal, that "all the bridges, and mud holes, and other obstacles of all sorts, have seldom been passed without at least one or two doleful tumbles." "In one instance," as we learn from the same authority, "a horse in jumping from Trenton bridge, slipped and fell, burst open his breast, and died on the spot. The riders, strained to the highest pitch of excitement and energy, generally contrive to save their necks, but they encounter hazards which the gratified curiosity of thousands can hardly repay. Yet there are always a plenty of men and boys with whom the pleasure of excitement more than outweighs the danger." This last fact is equally lucky and fortunate. What if now and then a man or a boy be killed—there are others to spring into the saddle! And what if a noble steed occasionally slips, bursts open his breast and dies on the spot—he is but a horse, and there are other impatient coursers panting for the race! "The curiosity of thousands," "gratified" by finding, sixteen minutes before the mail arrives that the Hon. Mr. Rusty-Fusty has made a speech of six hours against the constitutionality of digging away a sand-bar three quarters of a mile above tide-water in Owl Creek,—or that the Hon. Tony Lumpkin has introduced a resolution, directing the committee of Ways and Means to inquire whether the duty on mouse traps and rat-tail files ought not to be diminished,—is an abundant consideration. No doubt the advantage to the public from this competition, will be past comprehension;—and being fully and resolutely determined that our morning cotemporaries shall not be permitted to arrogate to themselves a monopoly of such merit, we have the satisfaction to announce to our 76,437 daily, and 169,346 country subscribers, that we have anticipated their plans, and established private routes not only between this city, Washington, Charleston, New Orleans, St. Louis and Oregon—but also have supplied ourselves with the means of intelligence from Liverpool, London and Paris in advance of the packets, and will shortly complete our Rail Road to the Moon. A line of subterranean cast-iron tubes, extending from our basement in Pine street to the basement of the Capitol in Washington, is soon to be laid down upon the principle of the recent invention in England, by means of which we shall be able, on pumping out the air, to propel a parcel from that city to this in three minutes and twenty-five seconds—being eleven hours and fifty-four minutes quicker than the President's last message was brought by the Standard's relays.

We have carrier pigeons placed in all parts of the country, to bring us the earliest intelligence, by means of which (such is the march of intellect!) it is probable we may soon be able to lay before our readers all the murders, robberies, hair-breadth 'scapes, and doings of nullification, several days before they respectively happen. Nor is this all. We contemplate locating an invisible gnome in the south-west corner of Amos Kendall's pocket, by means of which we shall become possessed of all the Presidential Messages and Vetos in a very few minutes.

In anticipation of all our cotemporaries, we have the ineffable satisfaction of further stating that Capt. Munchausen, of the Cutter Streak o'lightning, belonging to this office EXCLUSIVELY, boarded the packet ship Philadelphia day before yesterday, in latitude 45 deg. longitude 40 deg. between the Azores and Cape Sable. Capt. Munchausen was fortunately clad in one of McIntosh's water-proof robes, and happening to find himself among a school of shovel-nosed sharks, he put the papers in his pocket, seized a bridle, and resolutely darted upon the back of one of the largest, who, not being accustomed to a rider, sped with incredible velocity. The captain, however, who is an old seaman, guided him on the course directly to Sandy Hook, where he arrived in safety this morning. The papers were a little wetted, owing to an aperture made in the McIntosh robe, by a sword-fish, on the passage. They are, however, sufficiently legible, and we are happy to transfer the most prominent articles to our columns, for the astonishment of our readers. We regret, that owing to the tardiness of our contemporaries, the intermediate details of the important occurrences to which they refer, have not yet reached this country.

From the Times of Jan. 17.

The news from Nottingham does not appal us. Ministers have not gone to war without measuring their strength. They are prepared for every exigency. Seven regiments marched this morning, and the Royal Brigade of Hussars from the barracks at Knightsbridge, with a detachment of the King's own, will proceed this evening with all possible despatch, to put down the reported rebellion at its outset. That the Duke of Wellington is at the head of the insurgents wants confirmation, as our American contemporaries would say.

From the British Traveller of the same evening.

Our courier has just arrived from Paris with the unexpected intelligence, that the populace of that city on Monday last, attacked the Tuileries about day break, and after having disarmed the guards, made the king, Louis Philippe, prisoner, and conveyed him instantly to the St. Pelagie prison. The Dey of Algiers was immediately proclaimed his successor, and was graciously pleased to issue his firman the same evening, to receive the Royal princesses into his seraglio.

The Morning Post of the same date says:

Every lover of legitimacy will rejoice to learn the occurrence of the late revolution in France. For ourselves we should have willingly acquiesced in the restoration of the Bourbons, but it must be acknowledged that they held the sceptre with a grasp too feeble. To quell the insurgent spirit of the French canaille a more vigorous arm was required, and we hail the ascent of Abdul I. to the throne of that kingdom with the most joyous greeting. If any thing can add to our extasy, it is the gratifying intelligence this moment received, that he has demanded the Princess Victoria for his harem, and that by the throwing of the handkerchief she is to be received as Sultana.

From the True Sun of the same date.

The Allgemeine Zeitung of the 8th, states that Prince Leopold and the fourteen Belgic nobles, passed through Breslaw a few days before on their way to Siberia, by order of the Emperor Nicholas. We regret to learn that an imperial Ukase has been issued for the mutilation of the prince on his arrival at the place of his exile.—Since the re-union of Holland and Belgium, all is tranquil in those kingdoms; and we learn that since the suicide of Don Miguel, and the elevation of Donna Maria, a similar tranquility has prevailed in Portugal.

We regret to inform our 245,783 subscribers, that our Irish papers were so much wetted by the accident referred to, that we have found it very difficult to decipher their contents. It is evident however, that although Daniel O'Connell has been proclaimed King of that nation by the title of Daniel I, the crown will not be permitted to sit easy on his brow. Ulster is arming to oppose him—potatoes are scarce—the winter had set in early and severe—and the tails of three valuable dogs, belonging to Lord Kilmasheen had been bitten off by—the frost.

DOMESTIC OCCURRENCES.

POSTSCRIPT.—Our splendid Genet Balloon that left here this morning at eight for Albany, has just returned from a legislative inspection, and furnished us with a report of this morning's proceedings. The matter in debate in the House of Assembly, was upon the construction of a resolution, offered originally in Low Dutch by the member from Rockland, and translated by Mr. Seger, the Clerk. The great question between the debaters arose upon the difference between tweedle dum and tweedle dee. After a discussion of three hours, the question was taken, and just as our Engineer left the room, he heard our venerable Speaker announce, "Ayes 67, Nays 54—the Dums have it." The Engineer having been compelled to halt about 40 seconds, when over Poughkeepsie, to repair some damage to one of the feathers in the tail of the kite, we are reluctantly compelled to defer the publication of the residue of the proceedings until our next Extra is issued, which will be in about twenty minutes.

The public cannot be sufficiently grateful to Citizen Genet for this wonderful aerial locomotive. It throws all previous balloon inventers not only in the shade, but into thick darkness.

☞ POSTSCRIPT.—Our telegraphs announce two clam boats in the offing, and a smack from Block Island coming up through Hell-Gate. Below, sixteen sloops, with coal, from Philadelphia, and a North Carolinian with tar and turpentine, to the house of Halyard, Mainsail, & Co.

THE ACTOR AND THE AUTHOR.—How much they resemble each other!—you never see their character in their performances. They infuse into them indeed their soul and spirit, but how rarely are they in ordinary life, in their intercourse with society, what they appear upon the stage, or in their volumes! In this perhaps they differ but a little from the rest of the world. There are few who do not wear a mask—for the purpose perhaps—but that is neither here nor there;—we do not allow ourself to dive into motives. Probably the epitaph that Junius gave Horne Tooke, would answer for the most of the world: "His situation did not correspond with his intention!—Boston Morn. Post.

LINE OF OMNIBUSES

From Twelfth street to Wall street.

ROSWELL BEACH, has purchased this Line throughout, and having added, as an Extra, the beautiful little carriage "Tom Thumb," has determined to start, alternately every fifteen minutes, the following splendid Stages, viz. the Benjamin Franklin, Paragon, Veteran, Albion, and Tom Thumb, which are not surpassed in convenience or beauty by any in the city. The horses have been procured at great expense, and are kept in the best condition for "the track." The Line being now in first rate order, the Proprietor hopes, by the regularity of starting, the excellence of his Horses, and the civility of his Drivers, to deserve the patronage of those whose convenience will be facilitated by the above arrangement, and of the citizens of New York generally.

N. B. Some dissatisfaction having been expressed by the holders of tickets, which were purchased from the former owner of this line, the present Proprietor begs leave to state, that when he purchased this line of coaches, he did not obligate himself to redeem any Tickets which might have been sold by the former Proprietor, previous to his purchase, and furthermore, that he has received as cash, Tickets unredeemed and of course a total loss. He trusts therefore it will not be considered illiberal in him, that he declines redeeming Tickets for which he has not received one cent, and which he never obligated himself to redeem, and which if he should redeem, would involve him in an expense greater than the undertaking under any circumstances would warrant.

POWELL'S BALSAM OF ANNISEED.

FOR COUGHS, SHORTNESS OF BREATH, ASTHMAS, &c.

UNDER the immediate patronage of several of the most distinguished Nobility and Gentry in the United Kingdom of Great Britain, Scotland and Ireland, in bottles at 50 and 60 cents each.

This invaluable Medicine has the extraordinary property of immediately relieving coughs, colds, hoarseness, difficulty of breathing, and huskiness in the throat. It operates by dissolving the congealed Phlegm, consequently causing a free expectoration. Those who are troubled with tickling in the throat which deprives them of rest night after night, by the incessant cough which it provokes, will, by taking one dose, find immediate relief, and one bottle in most cases will effect a cure. Numerous cases have come to the Proprietor's knowledge, where young people have been troubled with Cough's sputting of Blood, and gradual wasting away, with every appearance of going into a decline, who, by taking two or three bottles, have been entirely cured. In Asthmas, chronic coughs, difficulty in breathing, &c., no pen can describe the wonders that have been performed by this invaluable medicine. Many, who for years have been unable to lie down in their beds without a danger of being choked by an accumulation of phlegm (which invariably causes a dreadful cough;) others, who with difficulty could breathe at all in a recumbent posture, have, by taking ONE DOSE of this excellent BALSAM, been enabled to lie down comfortably in their beds. But the testimonials of those who have experienced its wonderful effects will do more to recommend and insure it the support of the public, than any thing the proprietor can say in its favor, and by particular request he has published the following:—

Extract of a letter forwarded by James Fair, Esq. of Lustruther, Roxburgshire, to Mr. Renwick, of Jedburg, who forwarded it to Mr. Powell.

"Dear Sir, Lustruther, 18th of January, 1830.

"You know that I was sceptical with regard to the wonders performed by the administration of Patent Medicines to the numerous complaints of 'afflicted patients.' I have now altered my opinion, at least in so far as to the effect produced on me by two doses of 'Powell's Balsam of Aniseed.' In fact it was quite magical! Having been for some time afflicted and tormented with what is termed a 'stomach cough.' I took one tea-spoon-ful of the bottle sent me, mixed with a wine glassful of cold water, in the morning, and the same in the evening, on stepping into bed; and although prevented from sleeping the whole of the previous night, I found myself entirely cured, not having even coughed from that time to this, a period of at least a week! had one of the 'Seraphic Choir' descended from Heaven and said, 'be ye whole;' the effect produced could not have been more immediate or effectual.

"You are at liberty to make what use you may think proper of this letter, for its contents are no less true than wonderful."

TO THE AFFLICTED.

THOSE who may have been so unfortunate as to have been under the necessity of taking large quantities of MERCURY, and now feel its poisonous effects, producing excruciating pains in the bones, giving tokens of decay, scrofulous eruptions on the head, the face, legs, and other parts of the body; as well as those troubled with the many diseases arising from impurity of the blood, leading to gout, rheumatism, pains in the breast, indigestion, coughs, consumption, and many other horrid forms of a complicated disease, are informed that almost certain hopes of permanent cure may be entertained by taking that truly valuable medicine, DR. THORP'S CARMENENTIA.

The exclamation of the learned Doctor Solomon is still more applicable to this wonderful medicine, than that to which he applied it:

"Is there no balm in Gilead,—is there not a physician there? why not then is the health of the daughter of my people recovered?"

Doctor THORP may be consulted at any hour of the day from 10 o'clock A. M. to 10 o'clock P. M. at his office, 399 Broadway; or by letter, enclosing the usual fee of five dollars. dec 22 1m

DR. DE GOURGUE'S PATENT SPECIFIC.

THIS medicine has been used with great success as thousands can testify. In all rheumatic affections whether acute or chronic, its decided superiority by affording almost immediate relief has been successfully tested. For the following complaints it will be found very efficacious, viz: Quinced sore throat, Hives in children, Pain in the back and Sciatica, Bruises and Sprains, Chapped hands, violent contusions, Fresh wounds, Burns and Scalds, Head and Tooth ache, Debility of the system. Prevents the eye from turning black if immediately applied; is excellent for washing the teeth and gums, &c. &c.

The specific has been administered with surprising success, in cases of flatulency, pain in the stomach, bowels, dysentery, &c.

The most inveterate Piles has been thoroughly cured by it. A Fistula, which in most cases proves fatal, yielded to the specific. The above medicine is held in such high estimation by many families that they are unwilling to be without it a moment.

Prepared and sold until further notice, ONLY at the south east corner of the Bowery and 8th street, 2d corner above Vauxhall Garden.

The extensive demand manifested for the genuine De Gourgue's Specific, has induced several to endeavor to deceive the public by persuading them to purchase a counterfeit medicine. No person except the proprietor in the city of New York is authorised to vend De Gourgue's Specific, and it can be obtained at no other place than the above, where it is prepared, and which may be known by the sign over the door. Each bottle is accompanied with printed directions, sealed with the initials D. G. on the cork, NONE OTHER IS GENUINE. Retail price 50 cents per bottle; wholesale $4 per dozen.

Directions—Shake the bottle and apply the Specific with friction to the afflicted parts. In fevers rub well the small of the back. For Hives, in children apply it freely to the chest. For Convulsions by rubbing the back and stomach, its effects are almost instantaneous. For the Headache apply it to the back of the neck and soles of the feet. For chilblains or frosted feet, rub them twice a day, or oftener. From 20 drops to a tea-spoon full may be taken inwardly, mixed with water.

A selection of certificates from numerous respectable individuals is annexed, to give the public some idea of the value of the above medicine.

This is to certify that I have used "De Gourgue's Specific," and the most beneficial result has been the consequence. For the last twenty years I have been afflicted with the rheumatism, and suffered to that degree, that I never went without a cane or a strengthening plaster. By bathing with the Specific the pain is removed. I can walk without a cane, and have no occasion for a strengthening plaster; the great relief I have obtained, I attribute under providence to the Specific. It gives me great satisfaction, therefore, to recommend it to my fellow citizens.

[Signed] THOMAS CRUMWELL, 359 Bowery.
New York, 2d February, 1832.

This is to certify that I have used "De Gourgue's Specific," to my entire satisfaction, and I do not hesitate to give my unqualified approbation in favor of the same. By the use of less than one oz., in three weeks time, my hand, which was badly torn to pieces with the loss of one finger, by the accidental discharge of a gun, was completely healed. I have also known others to use it with like success.

[Signed] EDWARD CONLEY, Blackwell's Island.
New York, July 3, 1830.

I have been in the habit of using "De Gourgue's Specific" for several years, and do not hesitate to give it the highest recommendation, having used it most plentifully and always found the greatest benefit from it.

[Signed] JOSEPH GANOUNG, 59 Carmine street.
New York, 12th Dec. 1831.

I certify, that having made use of "De Gourgue's Patent Specific" for myself and family, occasionally for more than two years,—I do not hesitate to recommend it to my friends for the cure of every complaint, and more than are named in the directions accompanying each phial.

WM. D. DISBROW.
New York, Aug. 2, 1830. Bowery, near Fifth st.

I have great satisfaction in recommending "De Gourgue's Patent Specific," considering it a very valuable medicine, having been in the habit of using it for the last three years. In a severe attack of inflammatory rheumatism, which deprived me of the use of my limbs, so much so that I could not put my foot to the floor or raise my arms,—I was induced to try the Specific, and was so much relieved that the next day I was enabled to walk freely, and speedily recovered, from the use of one bottle. I have also used it with the greatest efficacy for burns, bruises, wounds, &c in my family. ELIZA BROOKS,
Jan. 23, 1832. Corner 1st Avenue and 10th st.

I was badly afflicted with a violent and continual pain in my breast, for about nine years, the last two or three years it was extremely bad. I had consulted five or six different physicians, and tried various remedies. Every thing, however, failed to give me relief, until I fortunately used "De Gourgue's Specific," which, I am happy to state, perfectly cured me in a short time. I keep the medicine constantly in my family, and use it for various purposes, and recommend it highly to all families.

CHEMICAL EMBROCATION.

OR, WHITWELL'S ORIGINAL OPODELDOC. One bottle of which is warranted to contain three times the strength of the hard kind.

This article is considered by the first physicians in the United States, to rank higher than any other composition in existence, for the following complaints, viz:—Bruises, Sprains, Gout, Rheumatism, Cramp, Numbness, Weakness or Stiffness of the Neck or Joints, Chilblains, Chapped Hands, Stings of Insects, Vegetable poisons, &c. &c. It is applied both to man and beast.

N. B There are in the United States no less than fifty imitations of this article, (a pretty good evidence of the worth of the original) but the public ought to be acquainted with the fact, that nine-tenths of these pretended imitations of this inimitable composition, sold under the name of "Liquid Opodeldoc" are, little else than hard soap, and a small quantity of camphor, dissolved in whiskey or new rum.

To encourage ignorant and bold pretenders, is to countenance imposture; to purchasers of this class time and experience will teach wisdom. Prudence, in all cases, is a desirable virtue; but the saving of a few cents in a phial of medicine is pitiful economy, and may lead to worse consequences than the loss of the money.

The idea of preferring a physician because he was a cheap one, would be considered a mark of insanity To prefer one medicine to another because it costs less is equally adverse to sound judgment and common sense; in both cases Life and Limb are at stake. No person could use the same ingredients and afford the article at a less price. A knowledge of this composition, however, is known only to the Proprietor and to the physician whose certificate accompanies it.

At this warehouse may also be had of the original and sole proprietor, the

VOLATILE AROMATIC SNUFF,

For many years celebrated in cases of catarrh, headach, dizziness, dimness of eyesight, drowsiness, lowness of spirits, hypocondria, nervous weakness, &c. —It is most fragrant and grateful to the smell, being mostly composed of roots and aromatic herbs. It is also highly necessary for all those who watch with or visit the sick.

Price 50 cents and 25 cents.

DETERGENT BITTERS.

A most efficacious and wonderful cordial medicine for dyspepsia, jaundice, sickness of the stomach, flatulence, want of appetite, &c. They give a tone to the solids, enrich the blood, and invigorate the whole system. No tavern should be without them. Price 12 1-2 cents a paper. The PURGATIVE POWDERS are highly important in all the above complaints, and should in most cases be used with the Bitters.

BUTLER'S INDIAN SPECIFIC.

THIS is to certify that for three years past, I have been laboring under a complaint of the breast and lungs and at last was taken down with spitting of blood, cough, fever and a general edematious state of the body, with all the symptoms leading to a consumption.

I had the advice of physicians and tried various remedies without relief and at last was advised to try Butler's Vegetable Indian Specific, which has so far restored me, as to be able to attend to my ordinary business. And as a most valuable medicine I do most cheerfully recommend it to the public.

NIBLO'S HOTEL,

No. 112 BROADWAY, BETWEEN PINE AND CEDAR streets, New York.

THE subscriber returns his grateful acknowledgments to his friends and the public for the liberal support afforded him since his establishment in this city. Having found, however, that the name of his Hotel, which he originally adopted, (Congress Hall,) subjects him to many inconveniences in consequence of the proprietor of a public establishment in his immediate vicinity having assumed the same title, and being unwilling by a continuance of the present name of his house, to embarrass his neighbor as well as himself, he has resolved on changing the same to that of NIBLO'S HOTEL, hoping under this new title to merit a continuance of public patronage. No situation in this city can present more advantages to permanent and transcient guests than Niblo's Hotel. Its central location, being near the principal places of amusement and its vicinity to the public offices and business part of the town, renders it a most desirable resort for families and gentlemen engaged in commercial and other pursuits.

The experience which the subscriber has acquired as proprietor, for many years, of that extensive establishment the EXCHANGE HOTEL, in Petersburg, Virginia, and subsequent as an associate with Mr. Heiskill of the City Hotel, Philadelphia, will, he trusts, prove a sufficient guarantee to all who may honor him with their patronage, that nothing shall be wanting on his part, or by those in his employ, to contribute in every respect to their accommodation and comfort. dec 22

CLINTON LUNCH,

Corner of Liberty street and Broadway.

THE proprietors of this establishment, which has been opened since May last, in consequence of the unparalleled support they have received, are induced to come before the public with their best thanks for the liberal patronage bestowed on them, and to assure them that instead of relaxing in their exertions to please, (which is too much the case with many who undertake to conduct similar establishments,) they are stimulated to increased exertions, if possible, and determined to preserve in the same straight forward path in which they have commenced, hoping thereby to deserve a continuance of that support they have hitherto so liberally been favored with. The undersigned being averse to all kinds of common-place puffing, have been determined that this establishment should rise or fall by its own merits or demerits; and as they have now been six months fairly before the public, and that public having continued daily to increase its patronage, they are justified in presuming that the course they have pursued in conducting this establishment has been generally approved, and as a proof of their determination to spare no pains or expense in improving and enlarging the same from time to time, as circumstances may require, for the public accommodation, they have now to announce that they have, at a very considerable expense, fitted up and handsomely furnished an extra Dining Room on the first floor, which was opened to the public on the 8th instant, the entrance to which is from No. 73 Liberty street. The proprietors will now be enabled to get up Dinners and Suppers for private parties, of all the delicacies of the season, in a style equal to any establishment in the city, at the shortest notice. They Wines and Liquors will as usual continue to be chosen from the oldest and most choice stocks in the city, and the personal exertions of the proprietors will be continued, and their best efforts exercised to please and to deserve public patronage. The Ordinary, as usual, will be conducted on the most liberal principles. Hot Coffee and Tea at all hours from 7 in the morning till 12 at night. Oysters of the best quality, in all their varieties, and Soups of every description at all times.

New Inventions.

RODGERS'S PATENT

Newly invented and Highly Improved Balance FIRE ENGINE.

JOHN F. ROGERS & CO., are manufacturing, at Waterford, Saratoga county, N. Y., on an extensive scale, Rogers' Patent Balance Fire Engine, and the Company do not hesitate to recommend it to the public as decidedly superior to any Fire Engine now known. It has been tested by skillful Engineers at the United States' Arsenals at Gibbonsville and Washington, and pronounced by them to be superior to all others. The Governm nt Arsenal at Washington is now supplied with one of the said Engines, and the Proprietor has on hand a contract with the Government for the supply of all their principal Arsenals.—This Engine combines the advantage of more power at less cost than any other in use, and needs only to be examined and tried to ensure it a preference to all others. Engines will be made promptly to order, of such dimensions and power as shall be required, and at reasonable prices. june
